FIRE DEPARTMENT ORDERS.

General Order No. 93.

Season's Greetings.

The Fire Commissioner extends the greetings of the season to every member of the department.

During the past year there have been many noteworthy achievements by the department, and the many noted visitors to the city, as well as the public in general, have expressed their highest praise upon the efficiency and morale of the Boston Fire Department.

The commissioner realizes that these results could have been obtained only through the sincere co-operation of the members of the department and takes this opportunity to express his appreciation and hearty thanks for the spirit in which the men have worked with him, and extends to them on behalf of the chief of department and himself his best wishes for a merry Christmas and a happy and prosperous new year.

By order of the Fire Commissioner.

John O. Taber,
Chief of Department.

REPORT OF EXPERTS.

Mayor Curley has addressed grateful letters of thanks to Prof. Edward F. Miller and Superintendent of Buildings and Power Albert S. Smith of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology for an important service they have performed for the citizens of Boston without compensation.

A month ago Mayor Curley requested these expert engineers to investigate the problems of rearranging the staffs of engineers and firemen of the Public Latin School, the City Hall Annex, City Hospital and Calf Pasture Pumping Station, with a view to making permissible reductions in their numbers and working hours that installation of the oil-heating system makes possible at considerable saving of citizens money.

The two professors gave freely of their time and effort, studying the matter with Schoolhouse Commissioner J. J. Mahar, and reported at length to the Mayor.

Mayor Curley intended both professors should be adequately compensated for their service, but not only do they both decline any compensation, but they offer their services to the city again when any such occasion arises.

The report relative to operation of oil-burning devices in the City of Boston was as follows:

Boston, December 23, 1923.

Hon. James M. Curley,
Mayor of Boston:

Dear Mr. Mayor,—In accordance with your request the undersigned, together with Mr. Mahar, examined certain oil-burning boiler plants, i. e., that at the Boys Public Latin School, that of the City Hospital, that at the Cow Pasture pumping station and that in City Hall Annex.

The Boys Latin School has three (3) 66-inch boilers of horizontal multitubular type each of about 125 boiler horse power. Two of these boilers are equipped with Fess oil burners. These boilers are heating 1,200,000 cubic feet of building space. At a rate of 3,000 gallons of oil per week the concrete storage tank holds sufficient storage for two and one half weeks consumption. This plant is well equipped. The settings of the boilers are constructed so as to allow for a large combustion chamber, allowing the oil to be wholly consumed. The plant is operated by one fireman.

The plant at the City Hospital consists of four (4) Babcock & Wilcox boilers with Murphy stokers and Dutch oven furnaces, the boilers rating at 300 horse power each, and four (4) horizontal multitubular boilers 6 feet diameter rated at 175 horse power each. One of the Babcock & Wilcox boilers is equipped with oil burners and three of the multitubular boilers are equipped for oil burning.

The yearly coal consumption of the hospital is said to have been 12,000 tons (long). The present rate of burning oil is 7,300 gallons per twenty-four hours. There is storage capacity of 100,000 gallons. The stack was emitting considerable smoke while we were at the plant, due to the fact that the combustion chambers under the tubular boilers were too low to allow complete combustion.

Seven firemen are now used on the three watches. Two firemen and a head fireman on the day watch and two firemen on each of the other watches. We can see no need of more than four firemen, two on the day watch and one on each of the other watches. We recommend that oil burners be installed under the three Babcock & Wilcox boilers not equipped and that these boilers be run instead of the horizontal multitubular boilers which, as they are set, have insufficient combustion space for good economy in the burning of oil. The closeness of the bridge wall to the shelling of the boiler, especially having a roundabout seam directly over it, gives a torch effect which is detrimental to the boiler and is apt to cause serious trouble unless it is watched carefully.

The Dutch oven furnaces on the Babcock & Wilcox boilers and the larger combustion chamber makes these boilers better suited for oil; besides there will be no difficulty in forcing these boilers to twice their rated capacity. It would not be advisable to force the other boilers, first, on account of danger to the boilers; second, on account of lower efficiency and the formation of smoke which is particularly objectionable at the hospital.

The Cow Pasture pumping station has six (6) horizontal multitubular boilers 78-inch diameter. Three of these boilers were making steam at 100 pounds' pressure; two at 175 pounds and the remaining boiler was laid up. Three water tube boilers of the Heine type, each of 300 horse power built by the Oil City Boiler Works are being installed. These boilers are set high so as to give a large combustion space and are well suited for oil fuel.

At present each watch of eight hours has a watch engineer, oiler, two firemen, two coal passers. As soon as these boilers are in operation all coal passers and one fireman on each watch can be dispensed with.

At the City Hall Annex there are three 250 horse power Babcock & Wilcox water tube boilers all equipped for oil burning. The oil consumption on a heavy day is 1,960 gallons per 24 hours. There is oil storage of 10,000 gallons. The plant runs per watch with one fireman in the boiler room and one engineer in the engine room.

With the water tube boilers such as are installed at City Hall Annex, at the City Hospital and at the Calf Pasture pumping station there is no difficulty in doubling the rating of the boilers by using oil as fuel. It is not advisable to force the horizontal multitubular boilers to more than their rated power. Boilers which run with a fairly steady load will show a higher efficiency with oil than with coal in a ratio approximately as 75 is to 68.

There will be a saving with oil over coal on boilers which are run at varying loads, banked for periods of four or five hours, as is the case in many of the school houses. There is also the saving in fire room labor and the saving in handling ash.

From a ton of bituminous coal of 14,400 heat units per pound a boiler with 68 per cent thermal efficiency utilizes 2,000 by 14,400 by .68 equals 19,584,000 heat units. While with a gallon of oil having a heating value of 18,500 heat units per pound, 8 pounds to the gallon, a boiler with 75 per cent net efficiency utilizes per gallon of oil 18,500 by .75 by 8 equals 110,000 heat units, making a ton of coal equivalent to 178 gallons of oil. On heat units utilized oil at 4½ cents a gallon would break even with coal at $7.34 a ton. The extra fire room labor and cost of removal of ash are to be deducted from this $7.34 in order to get the relative price per ton at which coal would equal oil.

An oil-fired plant properly handled can be run smokeless and the boiler room can be kept as clean as an engine room.

We are inclosing a sheet which we give the students, showing price per gallon of oil burned with 80 per cent net efficiency compared with coal at $10 per ton burned with efficiencies as shown by top line.

We trust that this report gives you the information desired.

We are, sir,

Very truly yours,

Edward F. Miller.
Professor of Steam Engineering, Head of Mechanical Engineering Department.

Albert S. Smith,
Superintendent of Buildings and Power, Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

HEAT VALUE OF COAL, 14,600 PER POUND.

Boiler efficiency	.75	.725	.70	.675	.65
Equivalent evaporation for and at 212 degrees per pound coal pound	11.284	10.908	10.532	10.392	9.779
Barrels of oil 336 pounds to barrel (42 gallons at 8 pounds, per gallon), 18,500 B. t. u. per pound burned with 80 per cent net efficiency, equivalent to 1 ton of coal	5.543	4.257	4.110	3 964	3.817
With coal at $10 a ton price of oil per barrel for same amount of heat utilized	$1.80	$2.34	$2.43	$2.53	$2.62
Price per gallon	$0.043	$0.056	$0.060	$0.061	$0.064

In general about 180 gallons of oil may be taken as equivalent of 1 ton of coal.

This takes space of 24 cubic feet as against 41 cubic feet for coal.

Advantages.

Cost of handling much lower than equivalent amount of coal.

Saving in labor in fire room, especially due to fact that there are no ashes to handle.

Storage space for same reserve capacity only .60 that of coal and storage space may be a considerable distance from boiler room.

Freedom from bunker fires and from deterioration in storage.

Only 60 per cent of chimney area needed for coal required for same capacity with oil.

Disadvantages.

Must get oil with high flash point to avoid danger of explosions.

City ordinances may require what may seem to be unreasonable precaution against fire of storage tanks.

If not properly installed, upkeep on boilers may be greater with coal.

Mayor Curley sent the following letter to both Professor Miller and Superintendent Smith:

City of Boston,
Office of the Mayor,
December 23, 1922.

My dear Professor Miller and Superintendent Smith:

I beg to acknowledge receipt this day of report submitted by you with reference to the operation of oil-burning devices by the City of Boston and I am deeply grateful for the unselfish service which you have rendered in this particular.

The greatest difficulty confronting American municipalities today lies in what is commonly termed precedent and custom but which in reality is dry rot and lack of system..

In presenting a report so complete in detail as to permit of immediate adoption you have rendered an immeasurable service to the City of Boston and in rendering this service gratis you honor the institution with which you are associated, while benefiting the entire people of Boston.

Respectfully yours,

James M. Curley, Mayor.

CHRISTMAS AT LONG ISLAND.

Mayor Curley carried the good cheer of the Christmastide to the 824 inmates of the Long Island hospital and institution, Boston Harbor, and spent an enjoyable hour upon Sunday afternoon, 24th instant, at a Christmas tree party. The 30-foot tree was set up outside of the administration building, as it was too large to place indoors.

Following a distribution of candy to the women and cigars to the men, the Mayor made a short address in which he earnestly advocated the bringing of the hospital and buildings to the mainland. He said that during the past week he had been talking with the Elks about having the Parker Hill Hospital transferred to the city to be used as the hospital for those at present at Long Island, and that it was also proposed to have the West Roxbury Hospital used for the inmates.

"I want to have cottages built out there for every couple, so that you can be alone again together," he said, "and I sincerely hope to be able to give you Christmas greetings next year in your new home."

Preceding and following the Mayor's address was an entertainment by professional and amateur talent. Miss Mary Foley, Miss Agnes Dailey, Miss Frances Dailey, Miss Elizabeth Keefe and Miss Marjorie Murphy, Boston school teachers, and Miss Anna D. Dailey, sang. Miss Maybelle Anderson and Miss Eileen Sullivan danced. Benoit's Pembroke Inn Orchestra played. Catherine Goggin, little daughter of Election Commissioner Thomas E. Goggin, recited a Christmas poem and Michael Feeney and Joseph Madden presented songs and stories. The exercises were under the direction of Dr. David J. Johnson, Commissioner of Institutions.

In the evening, the entertainers went to Deer Island, where they gave Christmas cheer to the inmates of the House of Correction.

THE CITY CHRISTMAS TREE.

Mayor Curley lighted the municipal Christmas tree upon Boston Common upon Sunday evening, 24th instant, at 5 p. m.

Some 4,000 persons were gathered around the tree at the time to witness the lighting, and to listen to an address from the Mayor, who had just come from a Christmas party at Long Island.

"Is it not time," Mayor Curley asked, "for the city, the state and the nation to provide a system of old-age pensions so that there will be no need for poorhouses?"

The speech and lighting were followed by carol singing by a choir from the West End Settlement House. It was said that every race and nationality in Boston was represented in this choir.

During the remainder of the evening the audience was never less than 1,000 persons. Toward seven the Community Service arranged a pageant of the Nativity. From 9 to 11 there was a band concert.

The complete program was as follows:

5 p. m.—Official illumination of Municipal Christmas tree by Hon. James M. Curley, Mayor of Boston; singing by children's chorus, reception by Santa Claus.

7 p. m.—Nativity pageant, arranged by Community Service of Boston; singing by children's chorus.

9 to 11 p. m.—Musical program, Stone's Military Band, John B. Fielding, conductor; community singing under the direction of Leon E. Baldwin of service unit.

10 p. m.—Christmas carols by Unity House chorus.

7.30 to 10.30 p. m.—Illuminated fountain display at Frog Pond.

The Christmas committee of the Public Celebration Association was Charles L. Burrill, chairman; Frank Chouteau Brown, Edward L. Curran, William Carroll Hill, James H. Phelan. Frank Leveroni is president of the association, E. B. Mero secretary and J. Philip O'Connell director of public celebrations.

The musical program by Stone's Military Band was as follows:

March, "Chimes of Liberty."	Goldman
Overture, "William Tell."	Rossini
Christmas carols, by band and people.
Selection, "Little Nellie Kelley."	Cohan
A group of American folk songs.
Entre act "The Wayside Chapel."
Old-time melodies we heard at home.
Galop, "Kris Kringle."	Turner
"The Lost Chord."	Sullivan
"Adeste Fidelis."
"Star-Spangled Banner."

REPORTS OF FIRE COMMISSIONER.

Fire Commissioner Theodore A. Glynn has filed the annexed reports relative to the broken water main upon Beacon street, Back Bay, and the train wreck upon the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, Hyde Park, upon the 18th instant, as follows:

"Alarm received by Fire Alarm Branch at 7.37 p. m. from Box 2315. Deputy Chief Fox of Division 2 upon arrival found that a 42-inch metropolitan service main had broken at the bridge on Beacon street. A tremendous volume of water pouring from the broken main was carrying earth, stone and timbers down onto the main line and Highland circuit of the Boston & Albany Railroad. Immediately seeing the danger and impossibility of the trains using these tracks, he had orders transmitted through the fire alarm office as well as notifying the railroad man in the signal tower thereby. The Water Department, Boston Gas Company and the Edison Light Company were also notified. The Police Department was ordered to stop all street cars and other traffic from crossing the bridge and to rope the street off to avoid danger to the traveling public.

"Upon request received to see what requirements were needed to remove water from basement of United States post office building, Brookline avenue, received at 8.30 p. m., Engineer of Motor Apparatus James W. Ryan and Superintendent Byington of the Bureau of Supplies and Repairs responded to the scene and had a reserve American LaFrance pumping engine put in operation draughting the water out of basement at 9.45 p. m. A large siphon was also put to work at the same location. At 1 p. m., December 19, the work was completed and the apparatus and detail were ordered to their respective stations. Approximate amount of water removed 1,080,000 gallons. Owing to the location of the basement of this building, said basement acted as drainage point for railroad bed, which covered with 18 inches of water for a distance of about 200 yards, and also the buildings on north side of track. This water flowed into basement through coal chutes under tracks as the water was drawn from basement."

"Alarm received at Fire Alarm Branch at 5.01 p. m. from Box 3743. District Chief Joseph A. Dolan of District 15 responded to scene and ordered his chauffeur to telegraph for ambulances and doctors. Investigated for fire but could not find any. Ordered the officers and members of Engine No. 48 and Ladder No. 28 to assist the people from the cars that were partly turned over, and made a tour through the cars looking for any person that was injured. The men recovered considerable property belonging to the passengers, turning some of it over to the owners, some to the brakeman and some to the depot master. The fireman of the train received a broken leg when the engine upset and a young woman was injured seriously. Both were taken from the train before arrival of the Fire Department.

"Chief of the Department John O. Taber also responded to the scene of the wreck, as did Acting Deputy Chief Michael J. Kennedy."

IMPORTANT CONFERENCE PLANNED.

A conference was held at the office of the Mayor to consider plans submitted by Walter Stuart Kelly, architectural expert, relative to the solution of the transportation problems affecting the eastern portion of Massachusetts, both rail and water.

The project submitted by Mr. Kelly, while involving an expenditure of approximately $40,000,000, in the opinion of the Mayor, was of sufficient merit to justify a conference at an early date in January of the City Planning Committee, composed of two hundred members and officials and engineers of the Boston & Albany Railroad, Boston & Maine Railroad, New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, Boston, Revere Beach & Lynn Railroad, Union Freight Railroad, Boston Elevated Railway Company, Eastern Massachusetts Railway Company, the committees of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange, Boston Real Estate Exchange, the City Council, State Commissioner of Public Works, Department of Public Utilities, committees on railroads and street railways of the Massachusetts Legislature, speaker of the House, president of the Senate, the Governor, Board of Street Commissioners, Commissioner of Public Works and Public Works Department engineers, Corporation Counsel, Finance Commission, banking officials, owners and publishers of the Boston newspapers, the Hotel Men's Association, and the heads of various local improvement associations.

The plans submitted provide for a union station, the electrification of all railroads within a radius of fifteen miles of the State House, the co-ordination through belt line railroad connections of all railroads entering Boston and the construction of tunnels between Boston, Cambridge and East Boston.

The city at the present time finds it impossible to provide adequate facilities for passenger service, rail freight or steamship service, and, in the event of the removal of the differential, would be in no position to handle the increased commerce resulting from the termination of this barrier.

In the opinion of his Honor the Mayor the time has arrived to determine whether Boston should be a pleasant watering place or a progressive American municipality.

TRANSFERS IN APPROPRIATIONS.

City Auditor Rupert S. Carven announces the following transfers in appropriations in departments of the City of Boston and County of Suffolk, indorsed by Budget Commissioner Charles J. Fox and approved by his Honor the Mayor:

City Clerk Department,

Boston, December 21, 1922.

Mr. Rupert S. Carven,
City Auditor:

You are respectfully requested to make transfers to provide for expenditures by the City Clerk Department as follows:

From Reserve Fund to B-3, $409.25;

From F-7 to B-3, $447.50.

From F-7 to B-2, $35.

The expenditures for B-3, Advertising, depend entirely on the length of the advertisement of the city and state elections and the number and length of the advertisements of the ordinances and street traffic regulations, factors over which the City Clerk has no control. This year the expenditures for this item so far have exceeded the average by more than $600 and I am accordingly obliged to ask for this transfer.

Yours very truly,

James Donovan,
City Clerk.

Transferred by the City Auditor, with the approval of the Mayor, December 27, 1922.

Mayor of Boston:

Dear Sir,—Permission is respectfully requested to make the following transfers:

From the Reserve Fund, $922.65, to the appropriation for House of Correction, Deer Island, D-3, Fuel, $922.65.

The reason for need of transfer to D-3, Fuel, is due wholly to unexpected sharp increase in price. The average price paid has been approximately $2 per ton higher than was anticipated.

The above amount is to cover bill already incurred. It will be necessary to ask for further transfer of about $7,500 to pay for about 700 tons to be delivered in January, but the City Auditor advises that we wait until the exact amount of the bill is known.

Very truly yours,

David J. Johnson,
Commissioner.

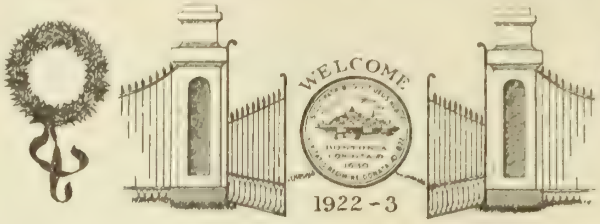
POPULATION BY AGE-PERIODS UNDER TWENTY-ONE YEARS, BOTH SEXES.

Under 7 years, 97,870; 7 to 13 years, inclusive, 88,524; 14 and 15 years, 22,481; 16 and 17 years, 22,616; 18 to 20 years inclusive, 35,629; total under 21 years, 267,120, or 35.71 per cent of City's population. Said total is 2,375 less than the corresponding total shown by 1915 census. The more the 1920 census figures are analyzed, the more incredible they appear. When it is further noted that the number of persons 18 to 20 years inclusive in 1920 was 6,063 less than those of the same ages in 1915, and that the total of children under 7 years in 1920 was only 1,291 more than the same in 1915, as compared with an increase of 9,689 in the preceding five years, the evidence is plain that thousands of young children and other minors were not counted in 1920. This appears more certain when it is noted that the excess of births over deaths of children in the five years 1915-1920 was 83,248, non-residents excluded.

GREETINGS TO VISITORS.

Mayor Curley extended the official greetings of the City of Boston to the guests of the principal hotels upon Christmas Day. An especially prepared Christmas card was placed in the room of each guest upon Christmas morning.

A similar form of greeting was also presented upon the screens of the moving picture theaters of the city and consisted of a reproduction of the municipal Christmas card as follows:



TO THE STRANGER WITHIN OUR GATES
THIS FESTIVE HOLIDAY SEASON:
THE CITY OF BOSTON EXTENDS HOSPITABLE WELCOME, AND THE
BEST WISHES OF ITS CITIZENS FOR A
HAPPY CHRISTMAS AND A PROSPEROUS NEW YEAR

FIRE DEPARTMENT ORDERS.

General Order No. 94.

Examination for Promotion.

As stated in General Order No. 91, the Massachusetts Department of Civil Service and Registration announces that it will hold a competitive examination on Friday, January 5, 1923, to establish an eligible list for promotion from the grade of engineer, assistant engineer, hoseman and ladderman to the rank of lieutenant in the Boston Fire Department. All members below the rank of lieutenant, who have served in this department for at least six full years, on January 5, 1923, are eligible to take this examination.

The applicants to take this examination will be divided into classes 1 and 2. Class No. 1 will take the examination in the morning at 9 o'clock, and class No. 2 in the afternoon at 1.30 o'clock. Members of the department who intend to take the examination are warned to report to the Department of Civil Service and Registration at the hours mentioned above.

Markings.—Inasmuch as the Commissioners of Civil Service have not definitely decided whether or not a change shall be made in the method of marking this examination, it is impossible to issue data on this question at this time. If changes are made, an additional general order will be issued to cover the same. However, if it is agreed that changes are unnecessary, then the markings contained in General Order No. 12, March 30, 1920, will remain in full force and effect.

Applicants are advised to answer every question on their experience sheets fully and correctly. Particular attention is called to Questions 8 and 9. Failure to do this may mean that an applicant's name will not go upon the eligible list when such list is established. The establishment of the list will not be delayed to straighten out any difficulties caused by applicant's failure to comply with these requirements.

Subjects of examination:

Experience	13
Report or general order	4
Practical questions on fire fighting, fire prevention and rules and regulations of the department	8
Total,	25

Each applicant must bring his own penholder, pen, blotter, pencil, eraser and ink.

Changes in days off must be made so that only those taking the examination will go on a day off January 5, and only so many will go on day off as the strength of the different companies will permit. The members will be divided into morning and afternoon classes and so notified by their officers.

The remainder, who are not granted a day off and are to take the examination, will be relieved from all duty during the examination periods for that purpose, and shall be equally divided into morning and afternoon classes.

Meal periods may be changed in order to permit these arrangements, so that at all times the numerical strength of the companies will be sufficient.

Places of examination will be announced later.

BOSTON AS A TOWN.

From its foundation until 1755, or a period of 125 years, Boston was not only the most outstanding but the most populous town in the American colonies. In 1760, Philadelphia's population was ahead, viz., 18,756, Boston's then being 15,631 and New York's about 14,000. In the last year of town government, viz., 1821, Boston's population was about 45,000 and its public debt $100,000, all incurred for new county buildings.

The history of Boston as a town during a period of nearly two centuries surpasses in civic interest that of Boston as a city because of the untiring zeal and successful efforts of its townsmen to realize more of true democracy than had ever been attained before. Their obligations were held as sacred as their liberties.

Mayor of Boston:

Pension of Joseph D. Sullivan.

Dear Sir,—Joseph D. Sullivan, officer at the House of Correction, Deer Island, has this day applied to be pensioned under section 56, chapter 32, General Laws.

I beg to report that Doctor McGaffigan has examined the officer and finds that he is incapacitated for further service, because of neuritis and flat feet. He is also suffering from inflammation along the genito-urinary tract.

He has been in the county service since May 24, 1909, and is fifty-three years of age. He is a veteran of the Spanish-American War.

Section 59, chapter 32, provides that the retirement authority shall be the County Commissioners and the Mayor. I assume, therefore, that the City Council will probably act upon this petition for retirement, subject to your approval.

I am inclosing a certified copy of Mr. Sullivan's birth certificate and a copy of his discharge from the army.

Because of the above information I am of the opinion that Mr. Sullivan's request for a pension be granted.

Respectfully submitted,
David J. Johnson, Commissioner.

Annexed were copies referred to.

Referred to the Executive Committee.

OPINION ON STREET RAILWAY LOCATIONS.

The following was received:

City of Boston,
Office of the Mayor, December 11, 1922.
To the City Council:

Gentlemen,—I beg to submit herewith opinion of Corporation Counsel, the same being submitted in reply to order of your Board adopted under date of November 13, 1922.

Respectfully yours,
James M. Curley, Mayor.

City of Boston,
Law Department,
December 6, 1922.
Hon. James M. Curley,
Mayor of Boston,

Honored Sir,—You have submitted to me for my opinion the following order of the City Council:—

Ordered, That the Corporation Counsel be requested, through his Honor the Mayor, to inform the City Council as to whether or not the granting of track locations and extensions in the City of Boston comes under the jurisdiction of the City Council."

By section 7, chapter 463, Acts of 1906, part 3 (now General Laws), section 7, chapter 161), the Board of Aldermen of a city or the selectmen of a town are authorized to grant locations in public ways for street railways, subject to the approval of the Department of Public Utilities. By section 64, chapter 463, Acts of 1906, part 3 (now General Laws, chapter 167, section 700), authority is given to grant extensions of track locations in public highways to the Board of Aldermen of a city or the selectmen of a town, subject to the approval of the Department of Public Utilities.

By section 28, chapter 486, Acts of 1909, (city charter), the jurisdiction exercised by the Board of Aldermen concerning "the use of the public ways for any permanent or temporary obstruction or projection in, under or over the same, including the location of conduits, holes and posts for telephone, telegraph, street railway, or illuminating purposes," is vested in the Board of Street Commissioners, to be exercised by that Board, with the approval, in writing, of the Mayor.

In my opinion railway tracks must be considered as projections and obstructions in and over public ways and therefore the granting of track locations and extensions in the City of Boston no longer comes under the jurisdiction of the Board of Aldermen (in Boston, the City Council), but is now under the jurisdiction of the Street Commissioners and the Mayor.

Mr. Thomas M. Babson, former Corporation Counsel, in a communication to the City Clerk, dated February 18, 1910, arrived at the same conclusion.

Yours respectfully,
E. Mark Sullivan,
Corporation Counsel.

Referred to the Executive Committee.

ACQUISITION OF ELKS HOSPITAL, PARKER HILL.

The following was received:

City of Boston,
Office of the Mayor, December 11, 1922.
To the City Council:

Gentlemen,—I have conferred with the Grand Lodge officials of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks with a view to acquiring the property commonly known as the Elks' Hospital at Parker Hill, Boston, for the use by the city for the treatment of the chronic sick. The property in question represents an investment of approximately one half million dollars and has been used as a reconstruction hospital by the Federal Government since early in 1918.

The same generous impulse which prompted this patriotic American organization, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, to tender this institution to the Federal Government for an annual rental of $1 in order that immediate and necessary medical and surgical service might be afforded those maimed in the World War is again evidenced by their willingness to co-operate with the City of Boston in the solution of one of its most important problems from the humanitarian standpoint.

The transfer of the chronic sick from Long Island to Parker Hill would result in their receiving the very highest character of medical and surgical service which today is impossible, owing to the location of Long Island.

The transfer of the chronic sick from Long Island to Parker Hill Hospital and later upon the abandonment by the Federal Government of the property at West Roxbury, where it is possible to house the poor, should result in a solution of this all important problem that will be conducive to the happiness of the unfortunates and a blessing to the community.

The price submitted by me to the Grand Lodge officials of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks for the property was $75,000, this sum to cover the transfer of title to land and buildings known as the Elks Hospital, Parker Hill, but this offer was purely tentative, since neither the committee representing the Grand Lodge officials of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks or myselIf could reach a final determination until favorable action had been taken by the Council and approval given at a formal meeting of the National officers of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

It is desirable that early action be taken by the Council and I accordingly recommend the adoption of the accompanying order.

Respectfully,
James M. Curley, Mayor.

Ordered, That the Institutions Commissioner of the City of Boston be and is hereby directed to submit in behalf of the City of Boston a tender in the sum of $75,000 for purchase of property designated as Elks Hospital, Parker Hill, Boston.

Referred to the Executive Committee.

RESTRICTION OF BOOK OF AMERICAN WARS.

A communication was received from the Library Trustees relative to removal from the catalogue of the Library of Helen Nicolay's "Book of American Wars," stating that the librarian had been instructed by the trustees to restrict the circulation of the aforesaid book to adult readers. (Said action followed order of City Council.)

The communication was placed on file.

Coun. WATSON—Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

President BRICKLEY—There being no objection, the councilor may.

Coun. WATSON—Mr. President, about one week before election a political organization circulated through the mails and in the press a pamphlet and, in a manner, referred to the candidates for the City Council to be voted on last Tuesday. It spoke highly of one candidate, killed with faint praise another, helped elect another to this body, and assailed myself and another who was elected to this body also. During the campaign there was no opportunity or, if any, slight opportunity to reply to the attack made upon me by that organization, both in its pamphlet and in its very full newspaper distribution. Today I intend to take a little time of the Council to reply to that organization and to its pamphlet, although it might go without saying that the returns of the vote cast last Tuesday ought to be sufficient, but that merely retires from the political arena this organization of seven, and I speak now so that my remarks about them—not individually, because they are not worth consideration as individuals, but as an imaginary organization—may be a matter of record for future generations to read.

The pamphlet, which took somebody's good money to print and to distribute, which met with cold reception even in the homes of the elite and the aristocracy, and one hundred per cent so in the homes of the intelligent, is in my hands. Its story concerning me is all wrong. It said of my education that I went to the Dudley Grammar School. They knew, and everyone knew that knew me, that my education was limited to the primary school. It also referred to the fact that at some time I voted in Ward 21. I never voted in Ward 21 in my life, but Ward 21 was the ward from which one Arthur Joslin, a former contributor to and a member of the executive committee of this reform organization and always a member of the Loyal Coalition, was convicted of having stuffed the ballot box some years ago. He may be one of the invisible members of that very small organization today.

It goes on and says several other things which are incorrect. It did not refer to the fact that for the past three years I had been not a salesman but a member of a concern of reputation in the community and today am the sales manager of that concern. In their opinion, I am "a perpetual office seeker"—"with success" they failed to add. "Conspicuous in the Council as a hindrance to the intelligent consideration of public business, we advise his defeat." Now, Mr. President, what is it that has made me conspicuous in the Council as a hindrance to the intelligent consideration of public business? Has it been my pronounced opposition to the Edison Illuminating Company? Has it been because of my pronounced objection and protest against permitting to be read and used in our public schools histories that are an insult to Americans, both native born and those who become naturalized as such? Is it because I have stood on the floor of the Council and, without mincing words, have called a spade a spade? If they call that a hindrance to public business then I plead guilty.

But I do not call that a hindrance to public business, because this year this body of which I have been a member has been a constructive one. I have sat here every day in the year. We have never failed of a quorum. We have voted at roll call on practically every important measure. We have voted here this past year nearly thirty million dollars of the public money and just merely a light insinuation for political effect was raised by an annex to the Good Government Association. I said at the hearing before the Finance Commission in April, in the very statement that I had there with me which they permitted me to express, that, unconsciously or otherwise, the Finance Commission was becoming attached to the tail of the Good Government Association, and I reiterated it, that either consciously or otherwise they have been used for political effect, but with slight success, and properly so.

I had rather a left-handed compliment paid me by the chairman of that committee. He publicly acknowledged that I was one hundred per cent honest in my public life. I preferred such an indorsement from elsewhere, but I will accept it from whence it comes, because I do not know that they know what one hundred per cent honest is, as they, too, are not immune from either money dishonesty or ambitious hishonesty. I will not go beyond the bounds of propriety. I will not attack them. In my opinion, serving any interest for higher honors in public life is just as corrupt as taking the coin of the realm. When a man will sit in a position and use his position to exalt himself or be promoted to higher office in serving the interests that are forceful and influential on Beacon Hill, in my mind he is just as corrupt as a man who may take money for something he does while holding a high office.

And I refer now not to the chairman of the Finance Commission—although the day may come when I may have to refer to him in the language in which I will refer to others. Have you seen the indorsements and the promotions for others who have served as the watchdogs of the treasury—the treasury of the other fellows—not alone to protect it but for what they get out of it—the watchmen of the treasury of the City of Boston? Where were the watchmen when Nathan Matthews handed over his Oxford place property to Stuart street? Where was the watchman when the Legislature, without our consent or act, said that Stuart street should be 60 feet—a most asinine proposition for a street designed to relieve congestion! No civil service organization made up of people interested in the future of the city would have permitted the widening of Stuart street to a width of less than 80 feet; and I have been told that by planning boards in Washington, Philadelphia, Baltimore and New York within a few days, and I think their opinion is shared by our own planning board.

Whenever they want something they go and serve the interests. Mr. Matthews did not serve as chairman of the first Finance Commission for his health. I do not mean to say that he picked anybody's pockets. He perhaps did not try—he did not need to; but he was clever in extracting things that result in the same thing as picking pockets. He succeeded in handing to the city a lot of property that was going and going fast for the extension of Stuart street, and he was able to collect from the Albany road for smoke nuisances in advance. His Oxford place property has been the source of great revenue to him, and that is all because he was chairman of the Finance Commission.

The next chairman was John A. Sullivan, for whom I hold no brief and have nothing against. We disagreed frequently. Mr. Sullivan, as chairman of the Finance Commission, with the consent and co-operation of the then Finance Commission, made up of Mr. Moors, Mr. Sullivan and others, evaded the civil service law by having the counsel of that Board today, John C. L. Dowling, made junior counsel of the Board in order to evade civil service. He was then secretary of the Finance Commission, and the Civil Service Commission said he held the office in violation of the civil service laws and in order to continue he must take an examination for the position, and fearing he might not be able to pass it he was made junior counsel and evaded civil service thereby, although John A. Sullivan was the attorney. But I think Mr. Sullivan has done penance for his sins; I think he sees his mistake.

Then going to the next chairman we have George Flynn. I respect him. He is a judge on the bench, a real red-blooded man, but he goes from the Finance Commission to the bench. Influence again! If it wasn't used for him it was used against him. So I anticipate that Mr. Michael Sullivan will be elevated shortly. I say it may be legally proper to do it but morally wrong, just as wrong as taking money out of people's pockets.

I intend to take only a few moments more, Mr. President, because we have with us Mr. McFarland, Mr. Hill, and Mr. Sullivan of the Law Department concerning the lighting situation. I was elected to the City Council, I believe, on three issues. Once was that, even though I do not suppose some people approve of my conduct, they thought that I was averagely honest. Remember there was only one perfect man, and that was two thousand years ago almost. He has never had a rival since and never will, and I am not competing with Him at this day. I am only averagely honest. I am a little "leery" of these honest Johns, and honest Walkers, and honest Jims. Watch them!

Now a word for the Herald, the paper that has helped elect me four times. Mr. President, think of that success! We may not have this charter many more years, but if it is changed I trust that the Legislature will show some degree of intelligence and not take something that imaginary reformers hand them. They handed this charter to us, and the Democrats have controlled it since. They want to amend it, I presume. If they do, we will control it just the same. We have the brains and they have the power. It is brains against brute strength. The Herald spoke on Sunday, through a man by the name of Carens,—not a Carey but a Carens. He writes very much for the Herald. He said I wore spats up at the Elks Club. I did, but I took everything the Good Government did, including their spats. I went to Washington and spent a few days in the Senate Chamber, and I lost my spats.

The Herald, which is the real imaginary reformer concerning a question under investigation by the Finance Commission—John told Minnie, and Minnie told Charles, and Charles told Horace and Lincoln O'Brien got it finally—the Herald said on Sunday in an article written by Mr. Carens, referring to the charter and to the election, that a minority decided the election. No, a majority decided the election. A majority of the people registered to vote remained at home satisfied with the present Council. The minority came out and a large part of it voted intelligently and elected your humble servant, the President, and the former editor of the City Record—circulation 100. I have no quarrel with Mr. Healey. I think he will make a valuable member of the Board, I doubt not as valuable as Miss Luscomb, who is in the gallery, I believe. Miss Luscomb made no ridiculous promises. I think "Bill" did. Miss Luscomb said she is responsible for improvement of the Council. She can share that glory with me. I am as much responsible for it as she.

The Herald said, speaking of Mr. Healey's great vote—I am sorry, Mr. President, that Mr. Hill is kept waiting—I think he will enjoy it—the Herald, pointing to the popularity of Brother Healey, showed how well he stood in his home locality by the magnificent vote he got in Wards 1 and 2. Admitted. They are Democratic wards, and "Bill" is a Democrat when he works at it, and I am a Democrat. Then it spoke about Councilor Brickley, and that I, James A. Watson, ran 200 votes ahead of Councilor Brickley in his home ward. Everybody that knows the Council knows that Ward 23 is not where his home is. That is where his people live, and being a bachelor he has a right to live where he pleases. His ward is Ward 6, and he carried it.

But it did not say a word about my vote in home district. It did not say that in Precinct 10 of Ward 13, where I live, out of 192 votes cast I got 184. It did not say that in Wards 13 and 14, where I have lived all my life, that Watson received 1,245 in Ward 13 and Healey 310, and in Ward 14 Watson 1,802 and Healey 437. They did not say that in Ward 1 Watson got 604 and Healey had 1,173, in Ward 2 Watson 607 and Healey 1,153, a total for the two wards in East Boston, where Healey lives, of 2,326 votes for Mr. Healey, and 1,211 for Watson, a majority of 1,115 for Mr. Healey where he was best known, and yet I was fairly close. But in Roxbury, where I have lived all my life, where they know me best, both morally and socially and politically, and where Mr. Healey is fairly well known, as much so as I am in East Boston, I received a total vote in the two wards of 3,047, and Healey received 740, a majority for Watson in Wards 13 and 14, where he lives and is known, over Healey of 2,307—within 10 votes of the total votes cast for Mr. Healey in East Boston as a majority. They do not mention that. No, that is to my credit. But what's the use? I am "poor Jerry, poor Jerry!"

One more word and I am through. I intend to continue my activity in this body along the same lines as I have in the past. I do not propose to trim my sails an iota. I do not propose to be artificial. I do not propose to remain silent when I have something to say. I am going to continue as I have all my life to be frank and open and above board, that my friends and enemies alike need not guess what I mean. I propose to say "yes" when I should say "yes" and "no" when I should say "no," and I am not going to equivocate for the pleasure of being expedient or to please somebody whom I do not intend to please.

I intend to hand to the stenographer the Boston Post editorial, that is, the last prayers at the grave of McCaffrey et al.—George H. McCaffrey, Jr., George R. Butter, Mrs. Charles I. Clark, Mr. Pinanski—first name unknown to me at present. I will furnish it from the bible of the Goo Goos—Abraham E. Pinanski. He will have it changed and abbreviated later. Instead of Pinanski it will be "Pin." We may add "head" later—"Pinhead." Charles J. Nichols, William Minot, Eliot Jones, Robert B. Stone, and George H. McCaffrey, looking for a job. May the good Lord rest their souls!

The G. G. A. Ticket.

"The Post does not feel it can conscientiously endorse the Good Government nominees for the City Council. Had the Good Government Association recognized the signs of the times, made its organizations thoroughly democratic and representative of the entire city; frankly and publicly allowed a discussion within the organization of the merits or demerits of all candidates, there would be little ground for criticism.

"Unfortunately, the Good Government Association has evolved into an autocracy. Its decisions, too, savor of the machine. Often excellent candidates are passed by because of practical politics. The association has shed its role of an advisory body and adopted that of a political party.

"We are not impressed with its candidates for the coming election. Councilor Watson, for whom certainly the Post has no personal liking, deserves better treatment than the association gives him. He has broadened out greatly in the past few years, dropped a good deal of his flippant demagoguery and settled down to business. He has been far more often on the right side than on the wrong. He has developed distinct possibilities for good which should be encouraged.

"John P. Higgins of the West End, a brilliant young man, who worked his way through college, has a fine record in the navy and is a chemist of standing, is the type of man the city needs. Yet he is cast aside for the reported reason that a certain political leader of his district would not support him.

"We believe, too, that John J. Lane, a clean-cut, industrious, popular young business man, rejected presumably because he might not bring enough political strength to the ticket, deserves to be considered an entirely acceptable candidate.

"The sharp criticism of James T. Purcell is unjustified. Mr. Purcell is a man of substance, an honest, honorable citizen and widely respected. The fact that he was a supporter of Mayor Curley one year ago is no argument against him, as the association supposes. There was plenty of other good men in that position.

"There are others, too, on the list discarded by the association who would have fared vastly better were a good strong dose of practical democracy injected into the body of the G. G. A.

"We have no particular criticism of the slate chosen by the Good Government Association except that the names by no means represent the cream of the field. Nor would the three nominees have secured designation in a properly constituted body representing the entire city.

"The Post has, in the past, given its support to the candidates of the Good Government Association. It will not do so this year. We cannot support a movement which has strayed so far away from democratic moorings."

I regret that I am obliged to interject into this statement of mine something concerning a rumor that I believe is well founded concerning the possible action of the School Committee, made up of Charles S. O'Connor, Richard Lane, Miss Curtis, Frederick Bogan, and Doctor Scannell. I have it on authority that I consider reliable that they are going to deny the request of this Council, of the American Legion, of the G. A. R., the Sons of the American Revolution, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Knights of Columbus, the Descendants of Signers of the Declaration of Independence, and other patriotic American organizations, that they remove from the schools the unAmerican histories called "American Histories" by Professor Ward, Professor Hart and Professor Muzzey. I trust that my informant is incorrect but I think he is correct. They are going to deny, I believe, the removing from our schools of these books, and I want to pay tribute to the Library trustees for their partial obedience of our request concerning Miss Nicolay's book on Ameircan wars. No child should be permitted to read it, and it is great to have a broadminded body like that take the advice of this body and remove it from the hands of the youth. Later I believe they will remove it from the hands of the elderly people. Why protect the children and not protect the new country children, those who come from abroad and become citizens by naturalization although of advanced years? They should not be permitted to use the books that our children are not permitted to use either.

The New York City school committee of twenty-one superintendents, principals and teachers, after six months' official investigation, found all the accused texts "unfit for use in public schools," and Ward's book, Professor Muzzey's book, and Professor Albert Bushnell Hart's book have been removed. They said: "The heroic history of a nation is the drum-and-fife music to which it marches. It makes a mighty difference whether America continues to quick-step to 'Yankee Doodle or takes to marking time to 'God Save the King.' "

Professor Hart said, and the School Committee know it, "The colonists liked to think of themselves as part of the British Empire." Fine stuff to teach the rising youths! "They were proud of being Britons." That is news to me. "They were as well off as any other people in the world." This is the voice of Professor Albert Bushnell Hart of Harvard College, saying that the colonists were as well off as any other people in the world, when seventeen of their statements in the Declaration of Independence state that they were dissatisfied and disgruntled and properly so. He says: "The colonists were not desperately oppressed." In so many words he says they were not justified in '75 in trying to throw off the yoke of Great Britain. "They enjoyed more freedom and self-government than the people in England." We were taxed for everything to support an army here sent here by the King of England. All these are things that have been brought to the attention of the School Committee. "Thousands of good people sincerely loved Great Britain and were loyal to King George. . . . The loyalists were harshly put down." What genuine, hundred per cent red-blooded American could agree to that kind of bosh from the pen of the great professor of history of Harvard College, Professor Hart? He says further that Jefferson was looked upon "as an atheist, a liar and a demagogue." That is in Professor Hart's book in part, and I might read much more.

But in Ward's book, referring to Washington it says: "If you had called him an 'American' he would have thought you were using a kind of nickname. He and his fellow colonists were proud that they were Englishmen; they gladly and loyally served an English king because he represented the freedom without which they thought life not worth living." And they died at Bunker Hill, at Concord and Lexington for what? According to Professor Ward—for fun. I might read much more from Ward's book. One or two more extracts would do no harm. He says this: "So the American Revolution was a contest between German tyranny and English freedom, although neither party in the struggle knew that this was the issue." Now there is a villiain in the story and we learn a very useful truth about English freedom. Germany was responsible for the oppression of the colonists. That is news to me. And that is taught to our school children.

Then Muzzey: I do not know that I need read it. It is filled with the same kind of stuff. Here is one quotation, and I will stop: "When we review, after a century and a half, the chain of events which changed the loyal British-American of 1763 into rebels in arms against their king in 1775, we see that the cause of the Revolution was a difference of opinion as to the nature of the British Empire, namely, whether the abuses of the king's ministers justified armed resistance." They are teaching that to our children in our schools, and I anticipate, I am sorry to say, that the School Committee will deny the request of this body to remove the books from their schools.

And in conclusion let me cite, as against their decision that I anticipate, this—the words of Washington, Webster, Lincoln, Cleveland and Roosevelt. Washington said: "Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence, I conjure you to believe me, fellow citizens, the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake; since history and experence prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government." Webster said: "I shall know but one country. The ends I aim at shall be my Country's, my God's and Truth's. I was born an American; I live an American; I shall die an American; and I intend to perform the duties incumbent upon me in that character to the end of my career." Lincoln: "Let us re-adopt the Declaration of Independence and with it the practices and policy which harmonize with it." Cleveland: "The immortal spirit of our domain lives in us. There it must find its nutriment or die. The land we live in is safe as long as we are dutifully careful of the land that lives in us." Roosevelt: "There can be no divided allegiance here. Any man who says he is an American, but something else also, isn't an American at all. We have room but for one flag, the American flag; and we have room but for one soul loyalty, and that is a loyalty to America."

Against the anticipated decision of the School Board, made up of four out of five members who are descended from the Celts—a Scannell, a Lane, an O'Connor, and a Bogan—I anticipate an unfavorable decision. But, oh, have they forgotten the adopted country and its history of their dads? Have they forgotten that we here in America are as a heaven-light to liberty loving people, and that we desire no entanglements with any foreign country? Do they realize that we will toady to no country; that we are just as much opposed to pro-Irish propaganda, pro-Italy propaganda, pro-French propaganda, pro-German propaganda, any anti-American propaganda, as we are to pro-British propaganda? My attack is on this pro-British propaganda that is in our country today by Professor Albert Bushnell Hart of Harvard College, for whom there is great interest being shown by the Board because he belongs at Harvard. Is it because, as is well rumored and founded and believed in fact, and perhaps they are not denying it, that in 1917 England sent a special envoy to America by the name of Balfour? He arrived in New York, and the present Mayor, then Mayor Curley, served a notice on Lord Balfour not to come to Boston to an official reception when he was not invited here. Who knows that Balfour came to Boston, that he dined with a high official of the School Committee at that time, that he dined with the president of a great college in England? Why the secrecy at that time? Was it then prepared and arranged for the foundation of this British propaganda from out of Harvard College and from the pens of Professor Ward and Professor Muzzey in our schools? We desire to be friendly with England as long as it serves our interest, protects our blessed heritage and the blessed name of the patriots and our blessed institutions—just so long and no longer.

And in conclusion I will say this, that I will not rest an hour from now until the next election for the School Board that I won't propaganda above board for the defeat of those who desire to toady to a small number of influentials and intellectuals who desire to reform others but not themselves and do their bidding because they have an A. B. from Harvard. A little word from a big business graduate at Harvard gets one member of the School Committee. A professorship in something else gets another, and so on until they are bought body and soul without the knowledge of even themselves. Mr. President, I have had my say, and in conclusion I want to say that I trust the remains of the late political campaign presided over by George McCaffrey, at so much per week and dictated to by another man, another reformer in the West End, that they will rest in peace.

RAILWAY LOCATIONS GRANTED BY STREET COMMISSIONERS.

Coun. DONOGHUE offered an order—That the Street Commissioners, through his Honor the Mayor, furnish the City Council with the number of locations granted to the Boston Elevated Railroad Company, the West End Street Railway Company, the Eastern Massachusetts Railroad Company, and any other railroads or railways operating within the city limits since 1909 down to the present date.

The question came on passage of the order.

Coun. DONOGHUE—Mr. President, I do not want to rehearse what I said in the executive meeting, but I just merely want to say as a matter of record that I am entering this order as a protest against the decision which has been handed down to us by the Corporation Counsel of our city relative to the granting of track locations, which in his opinion as rendered today comes under the jurisdiction of the Street Commissioners. In my opinion it does not come under the jurisdiction of the Street Commissioners, despite the ruling of the Corporation Counsel, and I feel that any layman without any knowledge whatever of law would never interpret, or would never countenance any interpretation of the act which has been quoted in his decision as saying that the matter of track locations comes under the jurisdiction of the Street Commissioners. I do not intend to allow the matter to rest with the opinion of the Corporation Counsel because while I know that we cannot appeal directly from his decision I feel that there is a means whereby we can obtain action against the Elevated securing any further locations, track locations in our city, through the equity court. And I think that it is about time that someone took some decisive action to bring back to the Council at least a little of the prestige that we ought to have. It is about time that these decisions which have been passed on to us by the Corporation Counsel with the old whisperings around us that "you haven't any power, and there isn't any appeal," ought to be cast into the basket or into the discard and some action taken to compel these men that make rulings which are so utterly unfair, which are so far beyond the ordinary intelligent interpretation of the act of the Legislature, realize that someone is going to start action in another line to compel them in the future to render a fair opinion and fair interpretation upon any matter which is submitted to them for their interpretation. I have no personal quarrel with the now Corporation Counsel, nor with any other Corporation Counsel, but I feel that we have all been under the impression that they must make their rulings so as to take away from the Council whatever vestige of power it might have so as to eliminate practically entirely the powers of this City Council, and I do not think that that is as it should be, and I do not think that that is as the citizens of our city expect or want it to be. I believe that they feel that the elected public officials of the City of Boston should be vested with some authority and some power and that all the power that belongs to this body, and which in every other city and every other town in our Commonwealth is vested in similar bodies should be brought back and given to this body and not taken away from us. No special legislation for Boston, no interference with Boston. We have had altogether too much interference, too much special control, and it is very near time and the time is fast arriving when the citizens of Boston demand the right to rule Boston themselves and not be governed by commissions and not be governed by appointees of either the Governor or the Mayor of our city, and I hope that the order will pass.

The order was passed.

LEGALITY OF RAILWAY LOCATIONS.

Coun. WATSON offered an order—That a committee of three members be appointed by the President to inquire into the legality of the locations granted to railways and railroads by the Street Commissioners since 1909 to date.

The rule was suspended and the order was passed.

Later in the session the President appointed as said committee, Coun. Watson, Moriarty and Donoghue.

TRANSFER OF CITY LAND.

President BRICKLEY called up Nos. 1 and 2, unfinished business, viz.:

1. Ordered, That his Honor the Mayor be and hereby is authorized in the name and behalf of the City of Boston to execute and deliver to Dominick Morello of Boston, County of Suffolk and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, a lease of a lot of land consisting of about 960 square feet, being the land numbered 24 Warren avenue, in Charlestown district, said lot being located on the easterly side of said Warren avenue on the corner of Water street, for a period of ten years at a yearly rental of $200, payable yearly in advance, reserving to the said city the right to terminate or cancel said lease by giving to the lessee, his successors in title or legal representatives thirty days' notice in writing of the city's intention so to do; said lease permitting said Morello to erect on said lot of land a building or structure to be approved as to its position on said lot and as to its height and construction by the Commissioner of Public Works of said city, the form of said lease to be approved by the Law Department of the City of Boston.

On November 27, 1922, the foregoing order was read once and passed, yeas 7, nays 0.

2. Ordered, That his Honor the Mayor be and he hereby is empowered for a nominal consideration to execute and deliver a lease to Fred P. Davis of 1,200 square feet of land on Washington street, in that part of Boston called West Roxbury, for a term of five years, reserving to the City of Boston the right to cancel said lease by delivering to said Davis, or his legal representatives, thirty days' notice of such cancellation; said lease to be satisfactory in form to the Law Department. No building is to be placed on said land except in accordance with plans approved by the Commissioner of Public Works as to the position of any building to be erected on said land and as to the construction of said building.

On November 27, 1922, the foregoing order was read once and passed, yeas 7, nays 0.

The orders were given their final readings and passed, yeas 7, nays 0.

REPORT ON AND REVIEW OF CERTAIN TEXT BOOKS IN HISTORY USED IN THE SCHOOLS AND ORDER RELATING THERETO.

The following was presented:

On October 23 the City Council unanimously passed an order requesting the School Committee to give a hearing for the consideration of certain objections made to the use in the public schools of this city of "School History of the United States," revised 1920, by Albert Bushnell Hart; Burke's "Speech on Conciliation," edited by C. H. Ward 1919; and "American History," by D.

S. Muzzey. The preface to the Ward edition of Burke's "Speech on Conciliation" was found to be in certain respects objectionable, and the book, therefore, has been dropped from the list.

In compliance with this request the School Committee appointed for a hearing the late afternoon of Wednesday, November 15, and in response to a further request that the hearing be in the evening rather than in the afternoon in order to meet the convenience of the members of the City Council, the hour was changed to 8 o'clock P. M. on that day. The City Council was represented at the hearing by one of its members.

The School Committee believes that extreme care is taken to avoid the inclusion upon the so-called Authorized List of any unfit or improper books for use in the public schools, and whenever in the past it has appeared that any books to which reasonable objections may be made have been so included prompt steps have been taken to discontinue the use of such books. This course will be followed in the future as carefully as in the past.

The School Committee welcomes all honest and fair-minded criticism of any of its acts, and particularly when such criticism is helpful and constructive. It does not welcome criticism that seeks merely to tear down or destroy and does not substitute for the object of attack something that is better and more useful.

The members of the Committee have personally examined the books under discussion, with considerable care, both before and after the hearing. They feel, therefore, that they are reasonablly well acquainted with the contents of the books, and with the objections that have been urged against them. They have also had prepared a careful and dispassionate review under the direction of the Board of Superintendents of all or substantially all of the criticisms made against these books and brought to their attention, and a refutation of these criticisms which, in the opinion of the Committee, justice to the authors demands. The review is hereto appended.

Neither this report, nor the accompanying review should be construed as indicating that the members of the Committee are in entire sympathy and agreement with all the statements which the books contain, nor that proper and balanced emphasis has been placed in all instances upon certain events in our national history. Opinions on this point must necessarily and widely differ and cannot be brought into absolute reconcilement, but such differences certainly are not sufficient to warrant the condemnation of the books nor the impeachment of the sincerity and good faith of the authors.

In the opinion of the Committee, also, there are in the books examples of what might be called "loose writing," one single instance of which must suffice.

Professor Hart says "the only way to find out what races composed the white population (in 1790) is to examine the family names and they show that about five-sixths were descended from English ancestors; one-twelfth were Scotch, Scotch-Irish, and Irish. . . . . ; about one-twentieth were Germans, and about one-fiftieth were Dutch."

We think this is not a correct historical statement to make. True, reliable statistics are, of course, hard to obtain, but it is surely not correct to say that the only way to find out what races composed the white population at that time is to examine the family names. For instance, the names of two hundred members of the Charitable Irish Society of this city, a society formed in 1737, have been called to our attention, who were members of that society prior to 1790 and most of them prior to 1770, and who would not, if Professor Hart's standard obtained of judging from names alone, very likely be considered by him as Irish.

In the course of the hearing irrelevant and extraneous matters were brought to the attention of the School Committee to which it listened with scant patience. The question at issue was the fitness or the unfitness of two books for use in the public schools. In the course of the hearing, what the School Committee regards as unwarranted and ill-founded attacks were made upon the authors of these books. The life of Professor Hart, the service of his two sons in the World War, and his ancestry forbid any suspicion of his loyalty and patriotism. The life of Professor Muzzey and his ancestry, with its record of honorable service in the Civil War, in the War of 1812, and at Lexington, equally forbid any belief that he would be subservient to foreign influence. Any hint or suggestion that either of these gentlemen was influenced to promote British propaganda especially by pecuniary recompense is unthinkable. Nor is their reputation and standing as reliable historians to be impugned by such criticism as is now levelled against them.

The real and only question at issue is whether their histories contain material to which reasonable and proper objection may be made. It goes without saying that no historian has ever succeeded in writing a book which met satisfactorily every point of view, nor does any history place an equal amount of emphasis upon all the topics which it discusses. One history may deal mainly with the social and economic growth of a nation; another with its military or naval exploits; another may dwell at length upon the personal achievements of its great figures; another upon its political development. It is clearly impossible that one brief volume should give adequate treatment to all the steps incident to the origin and growth of a great nation. Therefore, the list authorized for use in the public schools contains not merely a single book, but many histories all differing in their treatment of the subject, and these books are, of course, largely supplemented by the personal instruction and guidance of the teacher.

If the books in question contain so much that is objectionable and unpatriotic, it is singular that some of our great body of intelligent and patriotic teachers have failed to discover these grave defects, and that the books have had so little apparent effect upon the loyalty of the pupils who have had access to them.

The School Committee also deplores the course pursued by the critics of these books in tearing from their context detached sentences and omitting explanations and summaries which are essential to a grasp of the authors' real meaning. The critic who pursues such a course may easily find opportunity for criticism of any book that ever has been written on the subject of history, and indeed on many other subjects as well.

In the course of the hearing certain passages in these books were attacked on the ground that they gave an unfavorable impression concerning the character and actions of a few of the great party leaders of the time; but it must not be forgotten that in such instances the authors have merely noted the opinions of opposing party leaders.

Unquestionably, the pupils in our schools are perfectly well aware of the severe, pointed and frequently virulent criticism that is constantly being directed against men now in public life. Acquainted with this criticism, is it reasonable to expect them to believe that the leaders of our country in past years were really super-men or demi-gods, and not equally subject to the weaknesses and frailties that surround human life today? Even the revered Abraham Lincoln was the target, in his time, of abuse and vilification. Nor did Washington himself escape the calumnies of some of his contemporaries.

As to the omission of what the critics regard as adequate mention of former national heroes, such as Nathan Hale, Anthony Wayne, Putnam, Sumter, Pickens, Marion, Stark, Sullivan, Knox, Commodore Barry, Sergt. Jasper, Light Horse Harry Lee, Molly Pitcher and Betsy Ross: It should not be forgotten that the exploits of these patriots, important, brilliant and picturesque as they were. have been repeatedly emphasized in the course in history during the earlier years of the pupils' school life while these two books are adapted to use of older pupils.

The School Committee would gladly express its opinion item by item on the various specific criticisms that have been made against these books were it not for the fact that to do so would unduly lengthen this report. They are covered in detail in the accompanying review.

The main and controlling question at present issue is this: Does either of these books contain matter which is unpatriotic, disloyal or calculated to falsely impress the minds of the pupils to whom they are made accessible? If they do, their further use in the schools should not be permitted. If they do not, there is not good and sufficient reason to justify their exclusion and the consequent reflection upon the sincerity and good faith of their authors.

It should not be forgotten moreover that these books are in constant process of revision and correction as errors and misstatements are discovered, and this is true probably of the works of all historians of standing and repute.

It may be pointed out also that those who advance these criticisms do not suggest the titles of other books which they would regard as unobjectionable. On this point they are absolutely silent.

The School Committee, therefore, having given due consideration to the matter, is of the opinion that the criticisms against these two books are not sufficient to justify their exclusion from the Authorized List, and directs that the City Council be so informed.

DAVID D. SCANNELL.
FRANCES G. CURTIS.

The undersigned, while in agreement with the foregoing report, is, nevertheless, of the opinion that the Board of Superintendents should see that in any future revision of these two books certain statements therein contained, which this report and the accompanying review do not approve, are omitted or modified by the authors or publishers.

RICHARD J. LANE.

Accompanying the foregoing was the review referred to therein, as follows:

Review of Hart's School History of the United States, American Book Company, 1920 and of Muzzey's American History, Ginn & Company, 1920.

For some years there has been going on an active campaign against the patriotism and integrity of several writers of text books in American History. The purpose of the present study is to examine two of the text books attacked, Hart's School History of the United States and Muzzey's American History. Both books have appeared in several editions, but the editions specified are Hart's School History, American Book Company, edition of 1920 and Muzzey's American History, Ginn & Company, revised edition, 1920.

The chief criticisms considered in the following pages are from Mr. Charles Grant Miller,— Treason to American Tradition; Mr. Wallace McCamant,— Review of Muzzey's American History; Mr. James A. Watson,— speech before the Boston City Council and interview reported in the Boston Globe of October 24, 1922.

Further criticisms are contained in the "Report on History Text Books used in public schools of the city of New York, 1922."

In general, the criticisms made by Mr. Watson, in regard to Hart's History, are identical with those contained in Mr. Miller's pamphlet— Treason to American Tradition. In the same way the objection made by Mr. Watson in regard to Muzzey's History coincide very largely with the arguments and criticisms of Mr. Wallace McCamant and those made in the Report on History Text books used in the public schools of the city of New York.

All of the materials above listed have been used in the present review and both books have been read from cover to cover. It has not been thought necessary to refer specifically to the critics by name as there is no desire to give the impression that there is any expression of personal animus in this review, and in some cases it is hard to discover the original source of the criticisms. An attempt has, however, been made to quote the critics accurately in order that their meaning may not be distorted.

"The School History of the United States" by Albert Bushnell Hart.

The first criticism is directed against the first paragraph of the introduction. As the first paragraph can be judged only in the light of the statements made in the paragraphs which follow it, the introduction is here quoted entire.

INTRODUCTION

"Why should a new School History of the United States be written? Chiefly in order to put at the disposition of the upper grades a book embodying a broadly national point of view and presenting adequate treatment of certain topics which hitherto have been too little stressed in the study of American history.

(1) The European background of our history is clearly sketched, with due recognition of our inheritance of language, law and political methods from England. Due attention is also paid to other influences from overseas.

(2) Great pains have been taken to treat adequately the various sections of the country, which differ somewhat from one another. Hence there are special chapters on the West, the far West, and the new South, as well as a brief but clear account of the thirteen English colonies and of the distribution of American territory among the colonizing nations.

(3) Another important feature is the fullness of treatment of the social and industrial conditions of the colonies and the later United States, for which twelve of the thirty-seven chapters are set apart.

(4) Wars are treated as intense experiences of the American people; the aim is not merely to give the causes and results, but also to show how the problems of raising armies and carrying on the struggles have been solved, and what was the effect on the life of the community. Military and naval movements are subordinated.

(5) A special effort is made to bring home to the minds of children the way in which our government is carried on. The book includes not only brief accounts of elections and political events, but also simple descriptions of important parts of the machinery of government, such as the Federal Convention, national banks and the tariff.

(6) As one of the main purposes of history is to bring boys and girls to understand such political questions as they themselves are likely to confront, about a third of the book is devoted to the period since the Civil War; the effort has been made so to simplify the questions of currency, banking, transportation and business combinations, as to make them understood by school children as a part of the problems of their own national and state governments.

ALBERT BUSHNELL HART."

The critics content themselves with quoting only the first paragraph, and professing to find in it indications of a new and apologetic attitude toward England. Without further comment upon the introduction we pass to a consideration of the several arguments and conclusions of the critics.

Mr. Hart says, in Sec. 87, Chapter VIII, Why There was a Revolution (1763-1774):

The British Empire (1763).

After the end of the long colonial wars, the English colonists were as well off as any other people in the world. They were proud of being Britons, as the English, Scotch and Welsh were called; though the names "England" and "English" were common instead of "Great Britain" and "British," just as they are often used now." The colonists liked to think of themselves as part of the British Empire which included Great Britain, Ireland, and three groups of distant colonies, as follows: (1) The Asiatic possessions. . . . . (2) The British West Indies. . . . . (3) The Continental Colonies of North America. . . . .

(See page 120, School History of the United States).

The critics compress the above as follows:

"The colonists liked to think of themselves as part of the British Empire. They were proud of being Britons. They were as well off as any other people in the world." (Mr. Miller in his pamphlet, indicates the omission of material by stars.)

In the foregoing the order of Mr. Hart's statements has been changed and a very material part of one of them has been suppressed with the result that Mr. Hart's meaning is misrepresented. When the words, "After the end of the long colonial wars," are omitted, the special time limitation intended by Mr. Hart is lost from sight. Keeping the historian's own words in mind and recognizing the fact that he refers to a specific period, before as yet England had enacted her most tyrannical measures against the colonists, one would find it very hard to prove that the Americans "After the end of the long colonial wars" (1763), were not as well off as the people of England, Ireland, France, Spain, Prussia or, in fact, "as well off as any other people in the world." The statements that "the colonists were proud of being Britons" and that "the colonists liked to think of themselves as part of the British Empire" are true for this particular period if the critics will accept the authority of Washington, Franklin and Irving. Mr. Hart explains in the proper place the change in American sentiment that came soon afterward. It is well known that the great demand for independence came later.

The next passage criticized is found at the end of section 93, on page 126, of Mr. Hart's history.

In the 1918 edition of his history Mr. Hart says: "As we look back upon the whole struggle, it is hard to see where the colonists were robbed or oppressed. In all local matters they had more freedom and self-government than the people in England. In no other country in the world were the people on the average so well-fed, wellhoused and comfortable; nowhere were taxes so low; nowhere did the people exercise so much control over their own government."

In the 1920 revised edition, Mr. Hart says: "The colonists were not desperately oppressed, but they were alert to resist the encroachments of tyranny. Thus in all local matters they had secured and maintained for themselves more freedom and self-government than the people in England. Their industry, moreover, had brought them prosperity. In no other country in the world were the people on the average so well-fed, well-housed, and comfortable; nowhere were taxes so low; nowhere did the people exercise so much control over their own government."

The critics refer specifically to the edition of 1920, and quote Mr. Hart as saying: "The colonists were not desperately oppressed. They enjoyed more freedom and self-government than the people in England."

It is hardly worth while to take the time to discuss this paragraph. Although the sentences quoted by the critics are put within quotation marks, Mr. Hart is not quoted accurately. "The colonists were not desperately oppressed, but they were alert to resist the encroachments of tyranny." The critics' omission of the second clause cannot be justified.

Mr. Hart does not say, "They enjoyed more freedom and self-government than the people in England." He says, "Thus in all local matters, they had secured and maintained for themselves more freedom and self-government than the people in England." There is no objection to the paragraph when taken as a whole. The meaning is perfectly clear.

The next passage quoted for condemnation, as a slur upon the soldiers of the Revolution, is a sentence from section 98, page 133, of Hart's history. Mr. Hart's words follow: (See section 98, page 133)

"It looked like a desperate thing for three million colonists to attack eleven million British. They began without a navy, while the British had 270 ships of war. They set out with raw militia to fight against a powerful regular army, though many of the Americans had never seen an enemy other than a wild Indian. . . . . Most of the American troops were organized in what was called the 'state line;' that is, state militia regiments enlisted for short terms.

"Washington throughout the war protested against depending upon these militiamen. Many served from the purest motives of patriotism, but others were drawn into the army by money, bounties, and promises of land. Though personally brave they disliked discipline and would sometimes leave when their term of service expired, even in the midst of a march against the enemy. Neither the Continental Congress nor the Colonies which became states were willing to give Washington what he needed; that is, an army of say 30,000 men, enlisted for several years, responsible only to Congress, well drilled, and accustomed to obey orders. The result of the militia system was that about 250,000 different men were enlisted, each serving on the average less than one year, besides about 200,000 militia serving for brief periods."

Is Mr. Hart to be stigmatized as un-American or pro-British because he points out some of the evils inherent in the militia system? Does he cast any slur upon the great mass of the soldiers of the Revolution, whether regulars or militia? Have not the evils of dependence upon a militia system and of the failure to provide adequately for national defence been repeatedly called to our attention even within the last few years? Is not a very large and very patriotic element of our people very much concerned even now over our lack of preparedness? And has not our lack of preparedness repeatedly brought us as a nation face to face with the very difficulties with which Washington was confronted? Is it not to the credit of Washington that he was able to hold his army together in spite of the shortcomings of Congress, the hostility of large elements among the people, the jealousy of influential army men as well as civilians, the almost absolute impossibility of holding to the colors men whose term of enlistment had expired? Would the critics have us make no use of the lessons which history teaches?

In section 108, on page 145 of his history Mr. Hart says: "Not all the Americans joined heart and soul in the Revolution. John Adams thought at the beginning at least a third of the Americans were at heart "Tories" as the loyalists were often called. However right and necessary the Revolution was, thousands of good people sincerely loved Great Britain and were loyal to King George. Some of them believed that the British Government was the best thing for the colonies.

"The loyalists were harshly put down even in colonies like New York and Georgia where at the beginning they were clearly in the majority. The patriots had the advantage of knowing each other through the Committees of Correspondence; and their informal congresses and conventions passed acts for arresting the loyalists and seizing their property. The General Court of Massachusetts banished 310 heads of families, including many of the best educated and most public-spirited men in the colony.

"Thousands were thrown into jail; scores were tarred and feathered; some were killed outright. In Virginia a man named Lynch tied up Tories and whipped them till they promised to become patriots, and that method came to be called 'Lynch Law.' About 30,000 persons in all were compelled to leave their homes and went to Canada, Nova Scotia, the West Indies or England. Those who remained were not allowed to take part in public affairs."

The critics compress the above quotation into the following words:

"Thousands of good people sincerely loved Great Britain and were loyal to King George. . . . . The loyalists were harshly put down."

Once more it is proper to protest against the practice of quoting only enough from a paragraph to give the impression which the critic wishes to convey. The authority of John Adams is probably good enough as to the number of Tories in the country. Mr. Hart shows that the Tories were harshly put down.

Probably he is condemned for stating that some of the Tories were good people It is indeed refreshing, although unfortunately, unusual to find a historian with so high a degree of fairmindedness as Mr. Hart.

A fair conclusion to draw from Mr. Hart's words is that by calling attention to the number, and standing of the Tories, and the means which it was necessary to employ in getting rid of them, he has thrown the difficulties against which the patriots struggled, into stronger relief.

In reference to Mr. Hart's statement of the causes of the War of 1812, to be found in section 165, on page 205, the historian is blamed for teaching "That the Indian outbreak in the Northwest was 'mistakenly supposed' to be stirred up by British agents." . . . . What Mr. Hart says is that the first of the reasons for war as stated by President Madison at that time was,—"Intrigues of the British with the western Indians. This was an error." But in the criticism no evidence is adduced to show that Hart is wrong. The tradition certainly is that at the time of the War of 1812 the British were intriguing with the Indians, and inciting them against the Americans. But there is no reason to assume that American tradition is absolutely infallible. It is possible that Mr. Hart through his own researches or those of other scholars has ascertained that the tradition is wrong. It would seem only fair to accept Mr. Hart's statement as true, unless and until competent evidence to the contrary is presented. In this, as in other cases, Mr. Hart will doubtless alter or correct his statement, when he is satisfied that he is wrong.

In the criticisms no illusion is made to the fact that Mr. Hart, in stating the other causes of the War of 1812, expresses in sharp, frank form his belief in the righteousness of the American side. They do not refer to the fact that Mr. Hart voices his suspicion that the British Government was insincere. This would go far in proving the absence of an apologetic attitude toward Great Britain.

Objection is made to the following: See section 163, page 204.

"In spite of the captures (of American ships by British) the profits of the carrying trade were so great that new ships were constantly built. The owners, in spite of their losses, were erecting stately houses and putting money into the banks and into new ships. Part of the captures were justified for some Americans had a way of furnishing their ships with false papers, intended to conceal the real nature of their voyage from searchers."

The first two sentences simply call attention to the profits made by the ship-owners and to the fact that in spite of losses they kept on building new ships. To show courage and perseverance is hardly to be considered un-American. The conditions described in the last sentence would give a pro-British writer a fine chance to show his Anglicizing tendencies, for the action he describes was illegal according to all the principles of international law. But Mr. Hart simply states the facts and leaves it to the reader or teacher to interpret them.

And again Mr. Hart is quoted to the following effect: section 164, page 205

"Madison wanted peace and so did his Secretary of the Treasury Gallatin."

Mr. Hart adds, that Gallatin had paid off $40,000,000 of public debt and did not wish to run up another war debt. The reason goes far to justify both Madison and Gallatin, but it does not appeal to Mr. Hart's critics. "However," continue the critics, "They could not stand out against the "War Hawks," a group of young men . . . . who proposed to conquer Canada and insist on terms of peace at Quebec or Halifax." In this criticism parts of two different sentences have been combined into one. Here is what Mr. Hart wrote—

"A group of young men who were to be the leaders during the next thirty years."

The words, "Who proposed to conquer Canada, etc.," really refer in Mr. Hart's text only to Clay. No great harm is done, for, as Mr. Hart says, Clay, Calhoun, and Jackson were the most remarkable men among the War Hawks; and it may be added that Clay's attitude very probably represented that of the War Hawks as a whole. An error of this kind does not, however, tend to inspire any very high degree of confidence in the accuracy of the studies made by Mr. Hart's critics.

Objection is made to the following:

"Nothing seemed easier (than to conquer Canada) for by this time there were about 7,000,000 Americans, and the whole population of Canada was not more than 450,000. In June, 1812, therefore, war was declared by about a two-thirds majority of Congress."

Just why these few sentences should arouse antagonism among Americans is hard to understand. Madison and Gallatin were old, experienced men who had done noble service for the American Union. They were conservative and did not wish to plunge the nation into war. They were supported in their opinion by Daniel Webster. Mr. Hart does not condemn them in any way. Clay, Jackson and Calhoun represented the young, enthusiastic element, burning to uphold the national honor. They had their way. Mr Hart does not condemn them. Is Mr. Hart to be condemned for pointing out that there was a difference of opinion between Madison, Gallatin and Webster on the one hand, and Clay, Jackson and Calhoun on the other?

Possibily the point to the objection is that Mr. Hart points out the disparity in numbers between the United States and Canada. And this fact may well have had some influence upon the war party, and to say so is to cast no reflection upon their courage or their patriotism in entering upon a war for which, as Mr. Hart says, there was "a good and sufficient reason." (Section 165.)

The following statements are also attacked.

"Hamilton was no believer in the wisdom of the people and is said once to have exclaimed. 'Your people, sir, is a great beast.' " (Sect. 143, page 181).

"The Federalists looked upon Thomas Jefferson as an atheist, a liar, and a demagogue." (Sect. 150, page 190).

The sections of Hart's history in which these statements are found, are quoted in full below:

Sect. 143—"Two Schools of Politics.—Such action was not acceptable to the country farmers, who owned no ships or stock in corporations. and wanted no banks. The spokesman for their point of view was Thomas Jefferson, then a well-to-do slave-owning planter. He believed that governments, whether state or national, ought to do as little as possible. He once said that the happiest people were the Indians, because they had no government to bother them. He wanted taxes to be low, and thought that the main purpose of governments was simply to make it possible for business men and all others to take care of themselves.

"Hamilton and Jefferson also differed with regard to the share of the people in their own governments. Hamilton and his friends thought that the suffrage ought to be given only to people who had some property; and that even those voters ought to select the richest and most intelligent men of the community who might act for them, and tell them how to vote.

"Jefferson favored giving a part in the government to the people at large. He admired the New England town meetings and public schools, and wanted to set up the same sort of thing in Virginia. He believed in widening the suffrage, and the new western states gave the ballot to most of the adult men. Hamilton was no believer in the wisdom of the people, and is said once to have exclaimed, 'Your people, sir, is a great beast!' But Jefferson wrote, 'I am persuaded myself that the good sense of the people will always be found to be the best army. They may be led astray for a moment, but will soon correct themselves . . . give them full information of their affairs through the channel of the public papers.' "

Sect. 150.—"President Jefferson (1801-1809).—When Thomas Jefferson was inaugurated in 1801, the Federalists felt that the end of the Republic was at hand, for they looked upon him as an atheist, a liar, and a demagogue. He was not an atheist; he liked to read the New Testament. He was a reserved man and did not tell everybody all that he knew, and hence some thought him false. He was a believer in government by the people, which many of the Federalists thought shocking, and they were sure that he could not be sincere.

"He was keenly interested in education and science, and urged his state to set up public schools and a state university. He was a natural reformer. As President he had large ideas of making the government better and more efficient. He appointed Albert Gallatin Secretary of the Treasury with instructions to aid in cutting down the cost of government and they succeeded.

"Jefferson desired to be the President of the whole people, and in his inaugural address appealed to the Federalists in golden words: 'Let us then, fellow citizens, unite with one heart and one mind. . . . We have called by different names brethren of the same principle. We are all Republicans, we are all Federalists.'

"One of the things that Jefferson liked was what he called 'republican simplicity.' He sent in written messages to Congress instead of making speeches, as had been the habit of Washington and Adams. He would have no ceremony at the White House, and shocked the Minister of Great Britain by opening the door himself when that great man came to call, and by receiving him in dressing gown and slippers.

"Jefferson was never what we should call a 'good mixer.' He hated speechmaking and meeting crowds of people whom he had never seen before. Yet no President has had more influence in Congress; none has ever made warmer friends among the people; and none but Lincoln has ever done so much to extend the idea that all the people ought to have a share in their own government."

If either of the two statements quoted from the above sections, as to the utterance of Hamilton and the characterization of Jefferson by the Federalists, is taken from its setting and allowed to stand alone without explanation, it is inappropriate for a school text, as will be pointed out later. Regarded in their proper light, as statements, not of the historian's belief, but as the utterance of Hamilton in the one case, and of the Federalists on the other, both statements if accompanied by proper explanation would be entirely appropriate for older students or for mature readers Mr Hart refutes the charges of the Federalists and leaves us in no doubt as to the high estimation in which he holds Jefferson. Not so much is said about Hamilton and a few lines of explanation would be desirable. At the same time, Hart's estimate of him is reflected in sections 124, 128, 139, 141, 142, 148 and 158.

There is nothing un-American in these sections quoted above in full, nothing which traduces the memory of these two great patriots.

A more serious objection has, however, been brought against these statements. In the schools of our large cities there is a large proportion of children having a very inadequate knowledge of English. Some of them might possibly remember from these sections only the words "beast" and "liar." It is reasonable, therefore, to say that the report of the characterization of Jefferson by the Federalists as "an atheist, a liar, and a demagogue" is unsuitable for pupils. The same may be true of Hamilton's remark in calling the people "a great beast." These expressions could be easily eliminated and doubtless both author and publisher would willingly do so.

Objection is made to a few lines in section 166 on page 207 of Mr. Hart's history:

"The crowning disgrace was the landing of a British force of about 5,000 men on the coast of Chesapeake Bay, and their march overland as though they were going to a picnic, till they captured Washington (1814)"

It is possible that this statement of the ease with which the foray was made might have been couched in more elegant language. The words are simply the reflection of the indignation which everyone who studies this period of our history still feels, that the British should have been able to accomplish their purpose with so little opposition. It must be again pointed out that these few lines, taken by themselves completely distort and misrepresent the historian's meaning. Those interested should read Mr. Hart's explanation of the reasons for this "crowning disgrace." They should read this entire section (166) with its dismal record of American defeats and then read section 167 with its record of American victories, its tribute to Perry, McDonough, Macomb, and Jackson, and then section 168 with its account of Sea Fighting.

To charge an historian with being unpatriotic or pro-British for pointing out the shadows as well as the lights in our history, to demand that the historian gloss over our errors, and reverses, while exalting our successes, under the plea of inculcating patriotism, is a form of argument as attractive to the unthinking as it is specious. If followed out, it could lead at best only to a blind, boastful, unreasoning patriotism. Patriotism, like everything else worth while, must be based upon truth.

Objection has also been made to certain illustrations in Hart's history. An examination of these illustrations shows that they exemplify one of the chief purposes of Mr. Hart's book—to show plainly the social conditions at each important period of our country's history. Most of them show merely the dress and the games of children during the revolutionary period.

II.

Muzzey—American History.

It is to be borne in mind that this book is intended for use with older pupils than those to whom Mr. Hart's history is adapted. Mr. Hart's book is written in simpler language and is especially intended for work with the pupils of the seventh, eighth and ninth grades. Prof. Muzzey's book is exclusively a high school text.

Mr. Muzzey is criticized for stating (in section 120) that "the cause of the Revolution was a difference of opinion as to the nature of the British Empire." Mr. Muzzey goes on to explain the statement; saying in effect that the colonists looked upon the Empire as a federation; the colonists felt that they were entitled to certain immemorial rights and to their own representative bodies which had the right to decide how much they should contribute to the support of the Empire. England considered the Empire as a unit in which Parliament was the source of authority. According to English opinion, the Americans were, like the great body of English citizens, represented by the Commons.

Most students of history will admit that there was a very material difference of opinion between the colonies and England on this point. Most students will agree that this difference of opinion was the fundamental cause of the war, although it is not always stated in just this way. If the critic considers that this difference of opinion did not exist, or that Mr. Muzzey is un-American, unpatriotic, or pro-British, in stating that there was such a difference of opinion, he should submit competent authority in support of his view.

The criticism appears to be aimed at the way in which Mr. Muzzey states facts and balances arguments. Mr. Muzzey's desire to give both sides of the question is not only typical but also in harmony with the American love of fair-play—something which is a strong characteristic of the present day young American for whom Mr. Muzzey is writing. The righteousness of the American cause, and the patriotism of the pupil, are nowise lessened, by showing both sides of the question. Mr. Muzzey's own conviction that the Americans were in the right is unmistakable.

Prof. Muzzey is blamed for omitting mention of Nathan Hale, Anthony Wayne, Putnam, Sumter, Pickens, Marion, Stark, Sullivan, Knox, Commodore Barry, Sergt. Jasper, Light Horse Harry Lee, Molly Pitcher, Betsy Ross and the birth of the Flag, the battles of Bennington and Stony Point and many other heroic names and events.

This criticism entirely ignores, however, the fact that there are about seventy-five different books available for use in instruction in American History in the Boston elementary schools, and about a dozen different textbooks in American history available in high schools, to say nothing of the resources of the school libraries. A teacher in the elementary schools probably bases her instruction on twenty-five different books. The same thing is true in general in the high school. No teacher bases her work on any one book. No pupil is expected to learn all his history from any one book. Histories are written from different standpoints. One writer stresses military features, another constitutional, another economic, another social, etc. One of the reasons for adding Muzzey's revised edition of his American history to the list was that the book contained a good chapter on the World War, and this applies also to Hart's volume.

Probably no one would wish to have the history of the last few decades omitted from text-books. But not much more time can be devoted to the study of history in our schools now than was given thirty years ago. More history must now be compressed into any given book. The great need of our multi-racial population is to understand the history and institutions of the present. In order to do this, some of the details of earlier history must be omitted. While no two historians and probably no two critics would agree absolutely as to what should be omitted, what retained, it is possible to establish certain fundamental principles and those principles are well exemplified in the book under discussion.

There are phases of history which are legendary, anecdotal, picturesque, which appeal strongly to the child's imagination. These phases are best treated in the form of stories told by the teacher and found in the reading books. Provision is made for such work in the early grades. History has its biographical aspect, in which series of events are grouped around the figures of great leaders. This also is provided for in our schools. In the upper grades of the elementary schools the pupils are ready for a consecutive study of our national history and they have such a course. To none of the stages indicated does Muzzey's history belong. It is a high school text, for pupils who have already during the entire school course been learning history in the elementary schools. They are ready for a book which does not deal with history solely from its picturesque side. They do not wish a book which repeats many of the things which they already know. They are ready to learn the causes of events, to trace the history of their country as a whole, to study the geographic, economic, industrial, and social factors which have entered into its development; to study present day political factors and conditions, and the importance of the United States as a great world power.

Objection is made to the following effect; evidently reference is made to sections 137 and 138 (pages 118 and 119):

'Every nation that gave aid or recognition to the colonists, according to Muzzey, was actuated by mean, selfish motives. France assisted only after she saw that 'The American revolt was a weapon strong enough to use in taking revenge on England. . . . Spain joined England's enemies with the hope of regaining the island of Jamaica and the stronghold of Gibraltar! Holland, England's old commercial rival, came into the league for the destruction of Britain's naval power and the overthrow of her colonial empire.' "

"Thus the American Revolution, after the victory of Saratoga, developed into a coalition of four great powers against Great Britain; and the American continent became again, for the fifth time within a century, the ground on which France and England fought out their mighty duel."

It is reasonable to point out here. that in section 137 Mr. Muzzey speaks of the French Ministry rather than France. Mr. Muzzey says:

"The French Ministry, which for over a year had been refusing the repeated requests of the colonies for an alliance, doubting if the American revolt were a weapon strong enough to use in taking revenge on England for the humiliating defeat of twenty years before, decided in the affirmative after Saratoga."

Of course, the "French Ministry" and "France" may be identical terms. Again they may not. In any argument however, a scrupulous accuracy in quotation is demanded as a simple matter of justice.

Again, it may be pointed out that the above quotations are taken from two different paragraphs of Muzzey's history. Had the paragraphs been quoted entire, the force of the objections would have been lessened. Almost anything may, however, be "proved" if sentences torn from their context are interpreted by a partisan critic. It is respectfully suggested to those who believe in the soundness of these objections that they read chapter XXVII of "The History of Modern Times," by Victor Duruy, translated by the late Professor Grosvenor of Amherst College, Henry Holt & Company, New York, 1894. Also, chapter LVII of the "History of France," by M. Guizot, translated by Robert Black, published by Estes and Lauriat, Boston. The books were written and translated so long ago that the two French scholars and their translators will probably not be accused of participation in the alleged campaign of American historians for distorting and Anglicizing American history text-books. Attention is invited to the following quotations:

Duruy says: "France had hailed with enthusiasm a revolution wherein she recognized herself. She received the American privateers in her harbors, and Holland sold them munitions. To determine France to convert this indirect assistance into an alliance the United States sent a deputation to Paris, at the head of which was the illustrious Franklin, who during his stay in France was the object of a constant ovation. The young nobility, exalted by philosophic ideas, and all on fire to efface the shame of the Seven Years' War and to fight against a detested rival, wished in a crowd to set out for America. The Marquis de la Fayette, aged hardly twenty, quitted his enceinte wife, and himself chartered a vessel which he loaded with arms. But the government dreaded a rupture with Great Britain. Turgot had demanded that France remain neutral, well foreseeing that England would gain more by acknowledging the independence of her colonies than by holding them restive under the yoke. De Vergennes, in accord with the cabinet of Madrid, was satisfied at first by sending indirect assistance; he secretly advanced Beaumarchais the money necessary for him to dispatch to the colonists the arms and munitions which they lacked.

"The defeat of Saratoga decided Louis XVI. to yield to the solicitations of Franklin and of his ministers. On February 6, 1778, he signed with the United States a commercial treaty, fortified by an alliance offensive and defensive if England declared war against France. The English ambassador was at once recalled.

Duruy, page 451.

It may not be out of place to remark that the French historian, as quoted above, apparently makes a distinction between the French people and the "French Ministry."

Duruy says further: "A check of Count d'Estaing before Savannah, which he wished to enter before the breach was opened, for a moment compromised the American cause. But a vast coalition was forming against the maritime despotism of England. To hinder France and Spain from receiving from the north states the naval munitions necessary to their arsenals, the English arrested and searched neutral ships. Hence arose a thousand vexations and abuses and the ruin of the trade of neutrals. Catherine II. was the first to proclaim the freedom of the flag (1780) on condition that it did not cover contraband of war, such as powder, balls, and cannon; to support this principle she proposed a scheme of armed neutrality which was successively accepted by Sweden and Denmark, Prussia and Austria, Portugal, the two Sicilies, and Holland. England forthwith declared war against Holland, the weakest and most vulnerable of the neutral states. Rodney threw himself upon St. Eustatius, a Dutch colony, where he made the seizure of more than 16,000,000 francs' worth, which the brave Lamothe-Piquet retook in sight of the English shores."

"Then were reaped the fruits of the policy of the Duke de Choiseul, who had renewed the alliance of France with Spain. The latter power offered its mediation, which England refused. Persuaded by the Count de Vergennes, who pointed out Gibraltar, Minorca, and the Floridas ripe for reconquest, she declared war against England and united her fleet to that of France (1779)."

It appears to be clear that France did not enter the war until the Americans, by the great victory of Saratoga, had shown that any assistance offered them would be effective. It appears to be true that France fought with the hope of humbling England. It appears to be clear that Spain entered the war only at the request of France and with the hope of regaining territory which she considered rightfully hers. It appears that Holland actually "came into the League for the destruction of Britain's naval power and the overthrow of her colonial empire."

Mr. Muzzey does not say that these were "mean, selfish motives." The motives were quite reasonable and comprehensible. If Duruy and Guizot and Muzzey are wrong, if the government of Louis XVI was longing to establish a new and free government on the American Continent; if Spain was anxious to assist in setting up a new nation, whose influence would be a constant menace to her own control of her vast American possessions; if Holland, from pure love of a foreign people, who were in possession of territory which had once been hers, was anxious to enter upon a war which would jeopardize her own existence —and this is what the critics would have us believe,—why do they not bring forward their proof, instead of making accusations unsupported by a particle of evidence?

What is there un-American or pro-British in stating that the American Revolution, after the battle of Saratoga, developed into a coalition of four powers against Great Britain? Is it true or is it not, that France, Spain, and Holland were fighting on the side of the Americans? What objection is there to saying that the American continent again became the ground on which France and England fought out their mighty duel? What Mr. Muzzey makes clear is that the American Revolution was no longer an isolated struggle—a revolt. It was recognized as a war. The Americans were at last openly recognized as a new nation and the epoch-making struggle is given its proper place in world history.

To quote a further criticism: "Muzzey teaches the American child that in the negotiations for peace, France sought to betray the interests of America and that America actually did violate her compact and betray the interests of France."

In the above criticism reference is evidently made to a few words of section 153, page 128. But this section cannot be properly judged apart from those sections which immediately precede it and those which immediately follow it. The subject of the peace negotiations of 1782 is an extremely difficult one to treat within the limits of a high school text book. The historian should be judged by his discussion as a whole, not by a few sentences Accordingly sections 150-158 are here quoted entire:

"150. GEORGE III. ABANDONS THE STRUGGLE. When the news of Cornwallis's surrender at Yorktown reached Lord North he threw up his hands and exclaimed, "My God! It is all over." The stubborn king was not so ready to read in Yorktown the doom of his tenacious policy of coercion. Always mistaking the satisfaction of his royal will for the salvation of the British Empire, he stormed against the rising sentiment for peace with America and wrote letters of petulant bombast to his prime minister, threatening to resign the British crown and retire to his ancestral domains in Germany. But threats and entreaties were of no avail. The nation was sick of the rule of the "King's Friends," and the early months of 1782 saw George III. compelled to part with Lord North and receive into his service, if not into his confidence, the Whig statesmen. Lord Shelburne, the new prime minister, sent a diplomatic agent to Paris to discuss terms of peace with the American commissioners, Jay, Franklin and John Adams.

151. COMPLICATIONS IN THE PEACE NEGOTIATIONS. The situation was a very complicated one. The United States, by the treaty of alliance with France in 1778, had pledged itself not to make a separate peace with England. Then the French had drawn Spain into the war, with the promise of recovering for her the island of Jamaica in the West Indies (taken by Oliver Cromwell's fleet in 1655) and the rock fortress of Gibraltar (captured by the English in 1704). The Franco-American alliance had been successful, as we have seen, in defeating the British invasion of the Atlantic seaboard, thus assuring the independence of the United States. But the bolder Franco-Spanish design of destroying the naval supremacy of Great Britain and dividing up her colonial empire had entirely failed. It soon became evident to the American diplomats at Paris that France was planning to find consolation for her defeated ally, Spain, at the expense of her victorious ally, America. In fact, Vergennes, the French minister, had prepared a map on which the United States figured as the same old colonial strip between the Alleghanies and the sea, while the western region north of the Ohio was to be restored to England and that south of the Ohio to the Indians, partly under American and partly under Spanish protection (see map). Thus the new republic was to be robbed of the fruits of the labors of Boone, Sevier, Robertson, and Clark, and the Mississippi was to be a Spanish stream. "This court is interested in separating us from Great Britain," wrote Jay from Paris, "but it is not their interest that we should become a great and formidable people."

152. OUR GREAT DEBT TO FRANCE. Yet we were greatly beholden to France. Her aid in men, ships, and money had been so timely and generous that it is almost certain that without it the American cause would have been lost. The Continental Congress, resorting to every possible device,—requisitions on the states, confiscation of Tory estates, domestic loans, even a national lottery,—could raise only a small fraction of the money needed to carry on the war. By 1778 it had issued $63,500,000 of paper money, which was rapidly coming to be worth hardly more than the paper on which it was printed. The bracing effect on our languishing finances of the arrival of 2,500,000 francs in French gold can easily be imagined. Our commissioners in Paris, therefore, were instructed by Congress not to proceed in the peace negotiations without the consent and concurrence of the French ministry.

153. THE UNITED STATES MAKES A SEPARATE PEACE WITH ENGLAND The critical question before Jay, Adams and Franklin was whether or not they should obey their instructions from Congress and refuse to conclude a favorable peace with the willing Whig ministry of England merely because France wanted to deprive the new republic of her western conquests and recompense Spain in the Mississippi Valley for what she had failed to get in the West Indies and in the Mediterranean. The commisioners, following Jay's advice, disobeyed Congress, violated the treaty of alliance with France, and concluded the peace with England alone, thereby securing the whole territory from the Atlantic to the Mississippi. But it took all the tact and shrewd suavity of Benjamin Franklin to make the French ministry accept the terms of the treaty with even tolerably good grace.

154 TERMS OF THE PEACE. There were difficult points in the negotiations with England too, despite the desire of both sides to come to terms. The British ministry readily acknowledged the independence of the United States and made but slight protest against its extension westward to the Mississippi. England also conceded to the United States the valuable privilege of sharing the Newfoundland fisheries. But the questions of debts due to English merchants from the colonists before the war, and the treatment of the American Loyalists, or Tories, were very troublesome. The American Congress had no money of its own and had no authority to dispose of the funds of the states. It could not, therefore, give the British ministry any sufficient guarantee that the debts would be paid. John Adams might assure William Pitt with some asperity and indignation that the Americans had "no idea of cheating anybody," but the declaration looked to Pitt remarkably like Mr. Adams' private opinion merely. This matter of the debts might have frustrated the peace negotiations entirely, had not the British supplemented the American assurances of good will by the secret plan to hold on to the valuable fur-trading posts along the Great Lakes from Oswego to Mackinac until the debts were paid.

155. THE PROBLEM OF THE LOYALISTS. Still more delicate was the question of the treatment of the Loyalists. Tens of thousands of the American colonists had been opposed to the war with the mother country,—some out of prudent anxiety lest the war would entail business ruin and general disorder, others from an optimistic belief that in spite of "Greenville's well-meant blunder and Townshend's malicious challenge" the situation could be "rectified without the disruption of the Empire." The more ardent of these Loyalists denounced the Congress in unmeasured terms as a collection of quarrelsome, pettifogging lawyers and mechanics; and when the Declaration of Independence put them in the position of traitors, many of them entered the British armies. To abandon these allies, who, at the sacrifice of their property and reputation in America, had obeyed King George's call to all loyal citizens to aid in putting down rebellion, seemed to the British ministry an unpardonable injustice. It thought that the American Congress should restore to these Loyalists their confiscated estates (valued at some $20,000,000) or reimburse them with the territory north of the Ohio, which Clark had conquered.

156. THE AMERICAN VIEW OF THE TORIES. But in the breasts of the American patriots the thought of the Tories roused bitter memories. It was not alone their jibes and insults, their vilification of the character of Washington and his associates, their steady encouragement of desertion and mutiny in the American army, or their own appearance in the uniform of the king's troops. Congress remembered how in the dark winter of 1776, when Washington was vainly imploring the farmers of New Jersey for food for his destitute soldiers, the Tory squires of the state were selling Lord Howe their rich harvests at good prices, to feed the British invaders; and how in the still darker winter that followed, while Washington's starving and shivering army at Valley Forge was losing more men by desertion daily than it was gaining by recruiting, the Tory drawing-rooms of Philadelphia were gay with festivities in honor of the British officers. It was hard that the new country, already burdened with a war debt of $50,000,000 with its political life to establish on a firm basis and its industries and commerce to organize anew, should be asked to recompense the men who had done their utmost to wreck the patriot cause,—men whom even the careful tongue of Washington called "detestable parricides!"

157. THE LIBERALITY OF ENGLAND'S TERMS. The British ministry finally accepted the assurance of the American commissioners that Congress would recommend to the states the restitution of the property of such Loyalists as had not borne arms against the United States and would put no obstacle in the way of the collection of debts due British subjects. The British government itself came to the aid of the "active" Loyalists, granting them liberal pensions and land in Canada. Europe was amazed at England's generosity. "The English buy the peace rather than make it," wrote Vergennes; "their concessions as to boundaries, the fisheries, the Loyalists, exceed everything I had thought possible." It was a complete if a tardy triumph of that feeling of sympathy for men of common blood, common language, traditions, and institutions, across the seas, which had been so long struggling to find a voice in the corrupt councils of the English court.

158. THE RETIREMENT OF WASHINGTON. On the eighteenth of April, 1783, the eighth anniversary of the night when Paul Revere roused the minutemen of Lexington to meet the British regulars on the village green, Washington proclaimed hostilities at an end; and, by the splendid example of his single-minded patriotism, persuaded men and officers to go to their homes "without a farthing in their pockets," confident in the power and good will of their new government to reward them according to their deserts. The final articles of peace were signed September 3, 1783. On November 25 the last British regulars in America sailed out of New York harbor, and a few days later Washington bade his officers an effectionate farewell and retired to his home at Mount Vernon, there, as he hoped, "to glide gently down the stream of time until he rested with his fathers."

A careful reading of these sections does not appear to sustain the objections. Muzzey's discussion may be summarized as follows:

George III, stubborn to the end, had to yield to the rising sentiment for peace. The new prime minister sent a diplomatic agent to Paris to treat with the American Commissioners, Jay, Franklin, and John Adams. (150)

The United States had pledged itself not to make a separate peace with England. France had drawn Spain into the conflict, with the promise of recovering for her Jamaica and Gibraltar. The United States had gained her independence but the naval power of Britain had not been destroyed and Spain's hopes had not been realized. France wished to indemnify Spain at the expense of America. Vergennes wished to assign the western region north of the Ohio to England, and that south of the Ohio to the Indians partly under Spanish, partly under American control. The Mississippi was to become a Spanish river. The new United States would be limited to the old territory between the Alleghanies and the sea and the conquests of Boone, Sevier, Robertson, and Clark were to go for naught. Jay wrote, "This court is interested in separating us from Great Britain, but it is not to their interest that we should become a great and formidable people." (151.)

In recognition of the timely and generous aid given by France, Congress instructed the commissioners not to proceed in the peace negotiations without the consent and concurrence of the French ministry. (Section 152.)

Jay, Adams and Franklin had to decide whether they should decline to make a favorable peace with England, merely because France wanted to deprive the new republic of her western conquests and recompense Spain in the Mississippi Valley for what she had failed to gain elsewhere. By the advice of Jay the commissioners disobeyed Congress, violated the treaty of alliance with France, concluded peace with England, thereby securing the whole territory from the Atlantic to the Mississippi. Benjamin Franklin finally succeeded in inducing the French ministry to acquiesce in the terms of the treaty. (Section 153).

It appears that these sections do not anywhere contain the word betray. The American obligations to France are fully recognized. The treaty with France was actually violated but the French ministry acquiesced in the action of the American commissioners. In view of all the circumstances it would appear that Jay, Adams, and Franklin acted with great judgment and courage. The wisdom of their action has been amply proved. Unless we are disposed to condemn Adams, Jay and Franklin, we can hardly blame Muzzey for giving a straightforward account and explanation of their acts.

Further objection is made in the following terms: "England alone was upright, unselfish and generous in the peace terms."

The pages of Muzzey have been searched without success in the endeavor to find this statement or one resembling it. It was probably suggested by certain words in section 157, page 130, already quoted in full above.

To quote further: "Europe was amazed at England's generosity."

The Frenchman, de Vergennes, is quoted as saying: "The English buy the peace rather than make it; their concessions as to boundaries, the fisheries, the Loyalists, exceed everything that I had thought possible." (section 157, page 130).

Such a feeling on the part of the Europe of Louis XVI. Frederick the Great, Joseph II, Catherine the Great, and even of Charles III is quite intelligible.

"It was a complete, if a tardy triumph of that feeling of sympathy of men of common blood, common language, traditions, and institutions, across the seas, which had been so long struggling to find a voice in the corrupt councils of the English Court." (section 157, page 130).

If to say that the English Court under George III was corrupt: that the decent elements in England had for a long time had no voice in the Government; that that part of the English people, which followed such men as Burke, Pitt, and Barre, had at last triumphed; if to say this be un-American and pro-British, then indeed a historian has no right to express an opinion rigidly based upon facts, but must blindly follow any and every sensational critic.

Another criticism is that among the causes leading to the War of 1812, Professor Muzzey says:

"The next move of the (American) administration was an attempt to bribe England and France to bid against each other for our trade."

This statement is found in section 236, (pages 182 and 183) of Muzzey's History, entitled "President Madison's Diplomacy," which should be read as a whole, in connection with the preceding section: "The Embargo Act." What he says must be briefly summarized as follows: Jefferson had reduced our navy far below the point necessary to protect American commerce. His sole remedy was "peaceful coercion." The Embargo Act was passed in 1807. It failed of its purpose and was repealed in 1809. A Non-Intercourse Act with Great Britain and France took its place. President Madison neither prepared for war nor developed an effective policy of peace. Deceived by the promise of the British Minister that the Orders in Council would be revoked, he reopened commerce with England. The orders were not repealed and the English minister was recalled. Congress repealed the Non-Intercourse Act in 1810. Macon's Bill was enacted in 1810, providing that as soon as either France or England withdrew its decrees against our shipping the Non-Intercourse Act should be revived against the other country. If Macon's bill was not an attempt to bribe the two powers to bid against each other for American trade—what was it?

It is true that "bribe" is an unpleasant word and that some other, such as "lead," "induce," "persuade," could have been used. But this is no reason for charging Mr. Muzzey with lack of patriotism, with subservience to Great Britain, with traducing the memory of our forefathers, with falsification of the records, or even with inaccuracy. That the whole section makes unpleasant reading is true. That the course of the War of 1812 contains a lesson for us is also true, and both Hart and Muzzey are to be commended for pointing it out.

There remain to be considered certain objections which while formidable in number, may be dismissed rather briefly. With the alleged inaccuracies of statement as to the exact place in which Patrick Henry's immortal speech was delivered; as to the circulation of Paine's "Common Sense;" as to the right of appeal from state courts to the Supreme Court of the United States; as to the number of the Union troops at Gettysburg on July 3, 1864, the present review does not concern itself; for, in the first place, it is a simple matter to make any necessary corrections, and the historian has shown his willingness to revise and correct his text; and, in the second place a discussion of such matters is beside the point for we are mainly interested in determining whether Muzzey's book is un-American, pro-British, and unfit for school use.

In regard to unfair statements as to the presidential campaign of 1896, the pacification of the Philippines, the forest reserve policy, the division of the Republican Party in 1910, and the activities of Senator La Follette, the criticisms made consist almost entirely in a different interpretation of facts, and the historian has as good a right to his opinion as the critic to his. The same thing is true in regard to the charges of partisanship,—with special reference to the tariff; and to the division of the people into classes. When Muzzey's pages are read as a whole, when they are discussed in class under the guidance of a teacher, the giants evoked by the critics shrink rapidly in stature.

There are statements in both of the books under question which cannot be given unqualified approval. There are passages which could be improved. There are no doubt minor inaccuracies of detail such as may easily be corrected. But there is no evidence of an apologetic attitude toward, or of subservience to, Great Britain; there is no evidence of a lack of patriotism. On the contrary a very fine spirit of Americanism pervades both books. With a few possible exceptions such e. g. as the references to Jefferson and Hamilton in sections 143 and 160 respectively, in Hart's history, the books contain nothing improper or unsuitable for the school room. Both writers have dealt with recent history in a fair and intelligent manner, expressing an honest opinion as is their right but with absolute abstinence from any vilification of those who hold opposite views.

Both writers have shown a striking sense of proportion, great skill in focusing attention upon what is vital, and commendable courage in calling attention to weaknesses and mistakes in our history, some of which still need to be corrected. The few defects of these books are insignificant as compared with their many excellencies. Both books mark an advance in the writing of history texts for school use. Both are worthy contributions to the study and the teaching of American history. Neither of them should be excluded from our schools.

The question came on the acceptance of the report and the adoption of the recommendation contained therein.

A roll call being ordered affirmative action was taken by the following vote:

The following minority report was presented:

After a very careful study of the books in question, "School History of the United States," by Albert Bushnell Hart, edition 1920, and "An American History" by D. S. Muzzey, revised edition 1920, I am of the opinion that there are many statements which are very pointed and altogether too free for the minds of the youth of our schools.

Many of our great American heroes are not mentioned, some barely spoken of, while others are set up in very degrading terms.

Important events in American History are passed over in a very light strain, appearing to be mere incidents and not great events in the life of America.

Patriotic inspiration, which many believe should be the chief cause for the study of American history, is not developed in the narrative in the necessary and usual degree. The pre-Revolution and the Revolutionary periods of our history, the story of Indian life, the Pilgrims and other topics which children like best and which are best for inculcating patriotism and a distinctive American Spirit, if it is to be developed at all from our history, are given too little space or entirely omitted.

The pre Revolutionary period is given but four and one-half pages, the Indians and their life no chapter, and the Pilgrims receive slightly more than one page.

All of our finest illustrations of the Revolution are omitted, such as; The Boston Tea Party, The Battle of Bunker Hill, Washington at Valley Forge. The Spirit of 76, The Minute Man, Lexington Common and the Signing of the Declaration of Independence, and only colorless illustrations which are largely uninspirational, supplied. This criticism of illustration also applies to those used in the War of 1812.

I therefore believe that the above mentioned books should be withdrawn from the schools.

The following minority report was presented:

I dissent from the report of the School Committee on the question of the character of the text-books in the Boston schools, "School History of the United States," revised, by Albert Bushnell Hart, and "American History," revised, by David Saville Muzzey. In dissenting from the Committee's report and from its action in retaining said books in the schools, I take issue with the statements contained in said report and the appended review of said histories by the Board of Assistant Superintendents. The subject under discussion is too broad to admit here of a dissenting report equal to its importance. Let me here note that little or no opportunity has been given the dissentors from the Committee's report and the review by the Board of Assistant Superintendents, to study the same, said review having been read for the first time on Friday evening last with only one copy of the same provided for the entire Committee. Sufficient to say that the review is purely and simply an evasion of a question the entire liberty loving people of America are watching.

The Committee is inconsistent in its statement that "the accompanying review should not be construed as indicating that the members of the Committee are in entire sympathy and agreement with all the statements which the books contain," since that review by the Board of Assistant Superintendents does not criticize, but defends both books except in one or two trifling instances. The Board's review offers as a defense for the most glaring and un-American statements in both Hart and Muzzey, interpolations of alleged contemporary history that seem to it to prove such statements to be true. It falls back in almost every instance upon long drawn out interpretations of matters of controversy some of said matters having become controversial only in recent history revisions. The Board's review made no reference whatever to my own brief against these books, a brief that cited many specific instances of the perversion of our history, giving page and chapter. It evaded many of the most important objections and palliated what were obviously and palpably wrong and harmful statements in said books. It is a more complete vindication of the books in almost every detail than even I had anticipated. The Committee criticized some of the protestants at the public hearing for the introduction of extraneous matters and an alleged attack upon the Americanism of Professors Hart and Muzzey.

It points out that there is but one issue, i. e. certain histories now in use in the Boston schools, and then immediately proceeds to turn the question into one of defence of the above gentlemen and their Americanism. The Committee ought to be consistent and give to the question itself the same exclusive attention it requires from the protestants. I have not assailed the Americanism of either Professor Hart or Professor Muzzey. I trust it needs no defence.

In this brief statement, since the matters and the specific objections to the same have already been fully presented to the Committee, I shall call the attention of the Committee to only a few of my objections and to ask it again if the objections are in themselves not sufficiently well founded to merit something more than its defence of the Americanism of Professors Hart and Muzzey.

Instead of these gentlemen teaching the youth in our schools in effect that it is rather difficult at this late day to fully understand why the patriots revolted against Great Britain, and that, all things considered, they were pretty well off, would it not have been better by far to refer them to the reasons and necessity for the Revolution as set forth in the Declaration of Independence itself, subscribed to and signed by those who pledged "their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor." That immortal document ought to stand at least on equal footing with the opinions of latter-day history revisionists. Or have we repudiated the Declaration of Independence, in the words of a prominent Britain of that time, as "a mass of rhetorical generalities?" Or should we not refer to the statement of the great historian Bancroft that "The Revolution was in consequence of the persevering ambition of Great Britain to consolidate its power over America," and further "In this manner Great Britain, allured by a phantom of absolute authority over the colonists made war on human freedom."

Would it not have been better to have given to the Battle of Bunker Hill, that epochal inspiration to those struggling for liberty everywhere, something more than six lines, as Hart does? That battle of untrained farmers against the perfectly disciplined and trained army of the greatest empire of its time, evoked the wonder and admiration of the world, even of Britons themselves. Is time and studied effort to lessen its meaning and importance in the mind of American youth? It was the first challenge of American liberty to armed and organized tyranny. Has it lost its meaning, and must it be silent now?

Washington, whose character and motives the revisionists have not as yet dared to impugn, declared, "Unhappy it is to reflect that a brother's sword has been sheathed in a brother's breast, and that the once happy and peaceful plains of America are either to be drenched with blood or inhabited by slaves. Sad alternative! But can a virtuous man hesitate in his choice?" Franklin, still permitted to rest in the peaceful serenity of a glorious memory, reproved and condemned delay and irresolution on the part of the colonists, when he knew that every method of peaceful entreaty had been exhausted, and declared, "Make yourselves sheep and the wolves will eat you." "God helps those who help themselves."

Joseph Warren declared in the Old South Meeting House in the address of the day, commemorating the Boston Massacre, at which some forty British army and navy officers were present and courteously treated, "Our streets again are filled with armed men, our harbor is crowded with ships of war; but these cannot intimidate us; our liberty must be preserved; it is dearer than life." The presence of a false impression in the histories for children as to the necessity for the Revolution is nothing short of treason to American belief and treachery to the American child.

Would it not have been better for Professor Hart, in writing of that immortal and glorious figure, Thomas Jefferson, instead of calling the attention of school children to the alleged charge of his enemies that he (Jefferson) was "a liar, a demagogue and an atheist," to omit such a charge even though he mildly refutes it, since charges and accusations remain in the minds of children particularly while the refutation is forgotten?

Why does he reiterate the charges in the questions for summary of the chapter, in the words "What did Jefferson's enemies think about him?" Would it not have been better, in order to give an insight into the real character of Jefferson, to point out that he prepared for the Virginia House of Burgesses, a resolution calling for the observance of the day on which the British were to put into effect the Boston Port Act, as "a day of fasting and prayer, devoutly to implore Divine Interposition for averting the dreadful calamity that threatens our civil liberties and civil war."

Instead of referring to Samuel Adams as "a politician" simply, would it not have been proper for Professor Hart to have the youth in our schools know the real character of the patriot who was the greatest single factor in the Revolution, Bancroft said that he shared every sorrow of his native town of Boston and that, speaking of his country, the great Adams said "she suffers with dignity, and rather than submit to an edict, barbarous beyond precedent, under the most absolute monarchy, she will put the malice of tyranny to the severest trial. An empire is arising in America; and Britain, by her multiplied oppressions, is accelerating that independence that she dreads. We have a post to maintain, to desert which would entail upon us the curses of posterity. The virtue of our ancestors inspires us; They were contented with clams and mussells. For my part, I have been want to converse with poverty and I can live happily with her the remainder of my days, if I can thereby contribute to the redemption of my country."

That is an incomplete picture of the real and great patriot, Samuel Adams, but it is refreshing alongside Professor Hart's "politician."

It was this same "politician" who wrote to Virginia describing the tarring and feathering of a farmer from Billerica and the carting of him through the streets placarded with a sign "American liberty—a Specimen of Democracy," surrounded by soldiers with fixed bayonets, and declaring in that letter "See what indignities we suffer rather than precipitate a crisis."

Bancroft says that the soldiers seemed encouraged to provoke the people that they might be given some color for beginning hostilities.

The Committee says in its report that no one believes our national heroes were demi-gods. That is true, but we object to a writer or writers of history books for the use of our children, taking the patriotic fervor and Divine inspiration from the character of the nation's founders and leaving only the dross of human failings. They leave to the juvenile philosophers and embryo historians in our class rooms the task of separating the wheat from the chaff, to suit themselves. It is as easy as it is dangerous and wrong to confuse the child's mind as to the real character of its national heroes. The child mind cannot and must not be tampered with in this regard. The consideration and estimate of the lives in general of the founders of the Republic should be left to maturer minds which will not regard them as demi-gods, but as glorious, devoted and self-sacrificing lovers of America and of liberty.

The Committee throws upon the protestants the burden of providing better school histories, and asks for constructive and not destructive criticism. Such an attitude is as unfair as it is unreasoning and illogical. That is the duty of the School Committee alone, once a case is made out against a book for text, supplementary or reference use in the schools. But if the Committee is looking for information on this point, and its reference to a better history or histories would indicate a realization of its uncertainty on the matter at issue, I would say that Bancroft's "History of the United States" is a treasure house of truth as to the facts, and of the story of the birth and development of the Republic during the first seventy or more years of its existence, and an inspiration to youth in its love for America, its history and its ideals.

There are in our Boston school service many teachers of training, erudition and talent, who could and would produce a work suitable for the class room based upon that splendid story of the birth of the nation. There are other histories available. It is rather difficult to establish in one's mind how Professors Hart and Muzzey have written histories so alien in thought and treatment to Bancroft, who was so much closer to the period in question and whose sources of information and correct historical data far exceeded those of the above gentlemen. The story as stated by Bancroft himself as to his investigations and studies, both in this country and in England, even into the most secret archives of both governments, would stagger the modern historian. For this reason alone, the American people prefer Bancroft to Hart or Muzzey. The petitioners ask, as I do now, for the exclusion of the histories in question from the schools of Boston on the ground that said books ignore, contradict, dilute and confuse certain established and accepted facts of American History; are inimical to the faith of youth in the aims, objects, ideals and purity of motive of the leaders of the American Republic and are in derogation of the character, spirit and service and sacrifice of our national heroes and of the founders of the Republic.

Let us adhere to, reverence and cherish the Declaration of Independence. It must live in the minds of the adult, and particularly in the hearts of the young, if America herself is to live in her pristine glory and power.

In the words of Bancroft, "This immortal state paper was the genuine effusion of the soul of the country at that time . . . . The assertion of right was made for the entire world of mankind and all coming generations, without any exception whatever; for the proposition which admits of exceptions can never be self-evident. As it was put forth in the name of the ascendant people of that time, it was sure to make the circuit of the world, passing everywhere through the despotic countries of Europe; and the astonished nations, as they read that all men are created equal, started out of their lethargy, like those who have been exiles from childhood, when they suddenly hear the dimly remembered accents of their mother tongue."

So be it.

Respectfully submitted,

CHARLES S. O'CONNOR

NAMING OF NEW SCHOOLS.

The following was offered:

ORDERED, That the new elementary school on Oakland street, Mattapan, in the Edmund P. Tileston District, be named the Lowell Mason School, in honor of Lowell Mason, an American composer, born at Medfield, Mass., Jan. 8, 1792, first teacher of vocal music in the public schools of the country, who introduced this subject as a regular branch of instruction in the Hawes Grammar School, South Boston, in 1837, and continued as a teacher of music in the Boston public schools probably until 1850. As a boy he was very fond of music and began to teach it while quite young. In 1821 his Boston Handel and Haydn Collection of church music was published, and at once made him noted, and enabled him to leave Savannah, where he had taught for fifteen years and make Boston his headquarters. Here he taught children's classes without charge, and published a number of music books for children, as well as glee books, and over twenty books of sacred and church music. A large part of the best American church music is Mason's. He died at Orange, N. J., Aug. 11, 1872.

That the new elementary school on Church and Centre streets, West Roxbury, in the Longfellow District, be named the Theodore Parker School, in honor of Theodore Parker, whose church formerly occupied this site. Theodore Parker was born in Lexington, Mass., on Aug. 10 1810, and died in Florence, Italy, on May 10, 1860. His grandfather was a Revolutionary officer and was present at the battle of Lexington. His father was a farmer and Theodore worked on the farm, going to the district school when he could and picking up a knowledge of general literature when he was only eight years of age. The tuition he had appears to have been extremely limited, but he was a remarkable student and spending all his spare time in teaching himself actually prepared himself for college, so that in 1830 he passed the Harvard entrance examinations and was admitted. From 1831 until 1837 he taught in different schools in Boston, Watertown and elsewhere. Becoming deeply interested in religion, he studied at a divinity school and in June, 1837, was ordained a minister in a Unitarian Church at West Roxbury. Mr. Parker's tendencies were wholly humanitarian and he became a prominent figure among those who supported the charitable and patriotic movements of the time. Although he was not in entire sympathy with the policy of the abolitionists he sustained the cause for which they struggled. He labored in the interest of peace, temperance, morality, the rights of labor, and in behalf of the poor. He was earnest, eloquent and indefatigable He became editor of the Massachusetts Quarterly Review in 1849, and wrote many of the articles which appeared in it. He was one of the notable figures of his day.

That the new elementary school on Armington street, corner of Webster place, Allston, in the Washington Allston District, be named the Andrew Jackson School, in honor of Andrew Jackson, seventh President of the United States, born in Waxhaw County, South Carolina, Mar. 15, 1767. His father was Andrew Jackson, an Irishman who emigrated to America in 1765 and died in 1767. The name of his mother was Elizabeth Hutchison. Little information is obtainable about his early schooling except that it was very limited. According to Parton: "He learned to read, to write and cast accounts—little more." As a boy of thirteen he took up arms against the British in the closing year of the Revolution and was captured and wounded. He began the study of law in 1785 and to practise in Nashville, Tenn., about 1788. In 1797 he became a United States Senator from Tennessee. He resigned from the Senate to become a Justice of the Supreme Court of that State, serving in that capacity from 1798 to 1804. In 1813 he organized a volunteer force of 3000 men and marched against the Creek Indians. He defeated them and won great popularity. In 1814 he was appointed a Major-General in the regular Army and directed to oppose the British who were operating in the vicinity of the Gulf of Mexico. He seized Pensacola, which belonged to Spain, but which the British were using as a base. He added to his military fame by successfully defending New Orleans against superior forces of British veterans. In 1817-1818 he waged successful war against the Seminoles. He was appointed Governor of Florida in 1821.

In 1823 he was elected to the Senate of the United States and nominated for the Presidency by the legislature of Tennessee. His competitors were John Quincy Adams, Henry Clay and William H. Crawford. No candidate had a majority of electoral votes and the House of Representatives chose Mr. Adams. In 1828 Andrew Jackson was elected President of the United States and he was re-elected in 1832. During his administration he did much to strengthen the power of the Federal Government and repudiated the doctrine of State sovereignty, prevalent in the South. He opposed relentlessly the United States Bank then in operation. He succeeded Thomas Jefferson as the leader of the Democratic Party and continued that leadership practically to the time of his death. His whole life was one long public career, and he was certainly one of the most forceful characters that ever occupied the office of President. He had endured the greatest hardships for his country and held a large place in the hearts of his countrymen. What might be called his eccentricities or originalities only added to his popularity and he was affectionately called "Old Hickory." He died at "The Hermitage," his private estate near Nashville, June 8, 1845, where he was buried. The State of Tennessee preserves the estate as a Museum of Jackson relics.

That the new elementary school on St. Mary's and Mountfort streets, in the Prince District, be named the William McKinley School, in honor of William McKinley, 25th President of the United States, born in Niles, Trumbull County, Ohio, Jan. 29, 1843. He received his education in the public schools of Niles, Union Seminary and Alleghany College. For a short time he taught in the public schools. On June 11, 1861, he enlisted as a private with the 23rd Ohio Volunteer Infantry. On July 25, 1864, at the age of twenty-one he was promoted to the rank of Captain. He served on the staffs of Generals Rutherford B. Hayes, George Crook, W. S. Hancock. On Mar. 14, 1865 he was brevetted Major of the U. S. Volunteers by President Lincoln for gallantry in the battles of Opequam, Cedar Creek and Fishers Hill. His entire war record was an especially brilliant one. He studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1867 and removed to Canton, Ohio, where he made his home the rest of his life. He began immediately to take an active interest in politics. In 1876 he was elected to Congress and for fourteen years continued to represent his district in that body. He was a high tariff advocate and as chairman on the Committee on Ways and Means reported the high tariff measure known as the McKinley Tariff Bill. In 1891 he was elected Governor of Ohio and re-elected in 1893. In 1896 he was nominated for the Presidency by the Republicans and elected. In 1900 he was re-elected President.

In September, 1901, while attending the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo, N. Y., he was shot by an assassin, with whom he was shaking hands, and died from the effects of his wounds a few days later. He was buried at Canton, Ohio. It was during President McKinley's first term that the United States determined to intervene in Cuba and war with Spain followed. By a treaty of peace Spain ceded Porto Rico and the Philippines to the United States. President McKinley was a patriot and statesman of the highest order. He was, moreover, a man of most lovable disposition. His sad and cruel death from an assassin's bullet, and the Christian fortitude with which he bore his sufferings and accepted death, all serve to enshrine his memory in the hearts of the American people.

Passed unanimously, under a suspension of the rules.

ASSESSED VALUATION OF REAL ESTATE PER CAPITA IN LEADING CITIES.

Boston, $1,765; Detroit, $1,708.70; San Francisco, $1,561.90; New York, $1,534.60; Pittsburgh, $1,384.13; Buffalo, $1,181.40; Philadelphia, $990.84; St. Louis, $990.71; Baltimore, $779.40.

INCOME TAX (STATE) ON INTANGIBLE PROPERTY.

In accordance with Chap. 269, ss. 2 and 11, General Acts of 1916, intangible personal property (except bank stock) ceased to be subject to assessment and taxation in 1917 and thereafter. In place of that tax an income tax was established, amounting to six per cent per year on income derived from such intangibles, subject to various specified exemptions.

Owing to the exemption from tax of intangible personal property, the total valuation of personality in Boston decreased from $328,929,679 in 1916 to $162,545,343 in 1917, a loss representing $2,945,000 in taxes. By sec. 23 of said Chapter 269, it was provided that the State Treasurer should pay to each city or town an amount equal to the difference between the personal property levy in 1915 and that of 1917 computed at the 1915 tax rate. If the income tax collections exceeded the amount required for such distribution, the excess was also to be distributed, this in proportion to the State tax imposed on each city or town in 1917. The amount of income taxes paid by the State to the City of Boston under said statute for 1917 was $3,704,855; for 1918, $4,085,175; for 1919, $3,017,133 and $620,735 for Schools; for 1920, $3,754,237 and $644,703 for Schools; for 1921, $3,182,205 and $660,122 for Schools. Total for the five years, 1917 to 1921, inclusive, $19,669,165. In 1917 the total distribution in Metropolitan District outside Boston was $3,198,281 or $506,574 less than in Boston alone. Total for whole District (incl. Boston) $6,903,136 or 61.64 per cent of total for State, and $1,423,401 in excess of the total shrinkage in taxes on personalty from 1916 to 1917 in the District due to the new law exempting intangible property.
